Forces hero reveals plan for army of volunteers to cut crime

EXCLUSIVE by Marijke Cox
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AN ARMY veteran famed for his inspirational eye-of-battle speech to troops in the Iraq War has vowed to make radical changes to Kent Police if he is elected as the county's first police commissioner.

Col Tim Collins says volunteer officers should get council tax discounts, and there should be more transparency in police investigations.

Col Collins, who was awarded an OBE for his morale-boosting message in March, 2003 – a copy of which was hung in the Oval Office by then-President George W Bush – reveals his top priorities in an exclusive article for KoS, highlighting his desire to involve the public in the way the force is run.

The 51-year-old, who lives in Whitstable, said he would push for changes in volunteering, create greater transparency of operational information, and ensure greater rights for victims.

He writes: "I believe very strongly that the people of Kent need to feel a greater degree of 'ownership' over their force, not in the sense of interfering with operational independence, but in having a bigger role in how it is run and how they're given information about what is being done and why."

He expressed concern over the lack of Special Constables in Kent – where there are now fewer than 400 – and proposed the creation of a Kent Police Reserve and a discount in council tax for those who volunteered to serve.

"There are many fine men and women serving the community as Specials, but I want to introduce a new tier which is around people giving what time they can and ultimately acting as a strategic

It's ugly, but it tastes good

STRANGELY shaped fruit and veg could soon be back on the supermarket shelves and in our shopping baskets if an MP's plan for a new company takes off. MP Laura Sandys believes too much 'ugly' food is going to waste because of our growing demand for perfect looking produce.

'Give us road toll money'

THE cash raised from government plans to charge foreign truckers £10 a day to drive on our roads should be spent on the county's road network, according to the leader of KCC.

Kent's roads bear the brunt of lorries coming to the UK, as thousands of trucks arrive through Dover.

'We can't run our public service like a church bazaar'

reserve to be used during crisis situations," he said.

Col Collins, who resigned from the Army a year after his awe-inspiring speech and now runs a firm training foreign police officers, also stated his belief that there needed to be greater transparency of operational information to engage the public in solving crime.

He writes: "For example, why shouldn't we have a local equivalent of the sort of top 10 wanted list that you see the FBI use to great effect? Shouldn't we all be contributing to running down those criminals causing the greatest harm in Kent and working with the force to bring them to justice?"

He also stressed his desire to equip victims with more rights:

BIG IDEAS: Col Tim Collins

"The criminal needs to be afraid of committing crime in Kent, and victims must know the system is on their side."

Col Collins announced last October that he wanted to be the Conservative candidate in the poll to become Kent's first elected Police and Crime Commissioner. He is believed to have won the backing of Prime Minister David Cameron and many Kent MPs, but is not yet the official Tory candidate.

PPCs are due to be introduced in November and will replace the police authorities currently responsible for hiring chief constables and holding them to account.

Kent Police Authority is chaired by Ann Barnes, one of seven independent members alongside seven Tories, one Labour and one Lib Dem.

The PCC – who will serve a four-year term – will have the power to hold the force to account, determine the policing strategy for the area, set the budget, and issue a five-year policing plan.

Col Collins, who was born in Belfast and served in Bosnia, Kosovo and Iraq before leaving the Army in 2004, said he was inspired by former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani, who reduced crime through tougher policing.

But chairman of Kent Police Federation, Ian Pointon, said that achievement was not just about tougher policing, but an increase in officers.

Kent Police is battling to save £50 million over the next four years due to a 20 per cent cut in government funding.

Around 1,500 jobs are on the line, including 500 officers and 1,000 support staff.

Mr Pointon said: "While I have huge respect for Col Collins, this is the police, it's not the military, and he needs to be more engaged with policing. That means talking to officers and staff from the bottom to the top."

"I can see candidates making headline grabbing statements, they won't be able to deliver. They need a better understanding of what policing is about and to become more engaged."

Asked what he thought of Col Collins' proposals about volunteer policing, Mr Pointon said: "I've got a great deal of respect for people who volunteer for the police and give up their time, but we can't run a professional public service like a church bazaar. Volunteers are important, but we need serving police officers."

He added: "Some of his points may be viewed as insulting or patronising by police. He needs to be more engaged and is more than welcome to come and speak to us here."

EDUCATION

League tables reveal even more of our students are making the grade

By Marijke Cox

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

SCHOOL standards have improved for another year in Kent and Medway.

The latest secondary school league tables published by the Government showed record-breaking results, with 11 boasting 100 per cent of pupils achieving the benchmark five A*-C GCSEs including English and maths.

But while some were highlighted as the top achieving in the country, others were among the worst.

The Marlowe Academy, previously the Ramsgate School, was named and shamed as the sixth worst performing school in England, with just 20 per cent of pupils achieving five good GCSEs – or equivalent qualifications such as BTEC – including English and maths.

In Medway, the Bishop of Rochester Academy fared even worse, listed as third worst in the country with only 16 per cent of pupils meeting the target.

Across Kent, however, the number of students meeting the minimum increased by 3.2 per cent to 82.5 per cent – three points above the national average. Six out of 10 pupils achieved five good GCSEs including English and maths, rising 2.6 per cent to 59.4 per cent since 2010, slightly above the national average of 58.9 per cent.

In Medway, 83.3 per cent of students gained five A*-C grades compared to 77 per cent last year. The number achieving A*-C including English and maths increased to 55.7 per cent.

Kent County Council cabinet member for education, learning and skills Cllr Mike Whiting said schools were once again ahead of the national average.

"While the focus in August was on individual success, it is now about recognising the hard work of [all] staff who give their all to helping young people learn and prepare for further education, employment and training," he said.

Over the next few years, schools will be challenged to raise standards in the core subjects of English, maths and science, and make sure disadvantaged students get better results.

In the latest league tables, the Department for Education revealed the difference between pupils on free school meals and those from better-off families.

For Kent, deprived students are half as likely to reach the standard benchmark of five good GCSEs.

Cllr Whiting said: "The focus on those from disadvantaged backgrounds is absolutely right. Education is one of the things that shapes a person's life and can break that generational cycle of low achievement and low aspiration."

Education chiefs in Medway welcomed the improved results but said

RESULTS: While some of our schools showed an improvement in exam grades others were among the country's worst there was more to be done to ensure pupils made good progress.

Cabinet member for children's services Cllr Les Wicks said: "There have been some good results across the board this year, with significant improvements at many of our schools and the best GCSE results in Medway for the seventh year running."

"We have a strong record of improvement, and while we are of course pleased with the overall results, we know there's more to be done and will continue to work hard to ensure schools are making good progress and achieving the right results for their students."

STAR CAST: Helena Bonham Carter, Hugh Jackman and Russell Crowe are among the Hollywood names starring in Les Misérables, to be filmed in Chatham

You could line up with the stars in film version of Les Misérables

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

FANCY the chance of appearing in a major musical movie alongside Hugh Jackman, Russell Crowe and Anne Hathaway?

All you need to do is show up to an open casting session in Chatham, and you could be picked to appear in a big screen version of Les Misérables.

And don't worry about thinking you won't be the right age – they need people aged 16-90 – but it will help if you can look French, and from the 19th century.

Amanda Seyfried, Helena Bonham Carter and Sacha Baron Cohen are also set to appear in the film being shot at the Historic Dockyard Chatham.

The session is being run by Uni-versalExtras, based at Pinewood Studios, and at £110 a day, it pays quite well too if you are chosen.

Company spokesman Wayne Berko said: "We are holding an open casting for people to be extras in the musical feature film Les Misérables.

"We need men and women aged between 16 and 90 who will be made up to pretend to be people from 19th century France. The types of role include villagers, passers-by, nuns, students, military officers, and convicts.

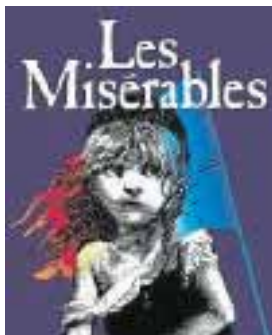

"It is quite easy to get in to, but you must be able to take direction well, plus be able to easily reach Chatham.

"Filming itself starts in March depending on what role the successful candidates are handed."

The Historic Dockyard Chatham is no stranger to the big screen, having been used for many blockbusters including Sherlock Holmes starring Robert Downey Jr, as well as The Golden Compass and a couple of Bond movies.

The stage musical of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables novel is a long-running West End hit and tells the story of several French characters over a 17-year period culminating in the 1832 revolution.

And an insider with the producers added: "We can't say too much at the moment, but it does look like we will be at the dockyard, the place is

CRIME

Justice catches up with brutal rapist 25 years after his crime

A DRIVING instructor has been locked up for eight years for the rape of a young woman 25 years ago.

Martin Eke (pictured), of Douglas Road in Tonbridge, was found guilty of the 1986 attack on 22-year-old Jacqueline Spriddell after a 15-month investigation by Kent Police's cold case team.

The 46-year-old was trapped by advances in DNA technology after a sample he gave to police following a common assault incident in 2005 was linked to the late-night attack on Miss Spriddell in Folkestone.

She had been on her way home after a night out with friends in October, 1986, when Eke grabbed her by wasteland at Folkestone West train station and raped her. He claimed the sex had been consensual but was found guilty of rape. He will serve half his sentence and spend the rest of his life on licence.

Miss Spriddell, who suffered kidney problems, died of renal failure in 2000 and therefore never got to see justice.

Speaking after the verdict, her family said: "We are very pleased with the result.

"It comes as an immense relief and at last there is justice for Jacqueline."

Det Chief Insp Rob Vinson, from the Kent and Essex Serious Crime Directorate, said it was tragic Miss Spriddell never saw Eke convicted.

"Jacqueline was a slight girl and didn't drink much because of her health problems and this attack had a huge impact on her life," he said.

"Eke must have thought he had got away with it after all these years.

"He is now behind bars and will be for some time – in a place where he cannot be a danger to anyone else."

FOOD

MP's company wants to put 'ugly food' back on our dinner tables

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

STRANGE shaped fruit and vegetables are rarely seen in today's modern supermarkets. Over the years the big retailers have set ever higher standards for the cosmetic appearance of our food.

Now Thanet South MP Laura Sandys wants to set up a not-for-profit company to specifically market so-called 'ugly food'.

She said: "We have had very cheap food in the UK for many years. In some ways this has driven us to value it much less. So while we don't pay much for our food it costs us more money to produce it."

The Tory MP has been discussing the issue with farmers to see why some food is rejected by the supermarkets.

She said: "You see the most amazing reasons. For example, an apple that may not have enough red on one side or too much green on the other."

"These apples do get used in things like apple juice, but obviously at a much lower value."

"Why should an apple that has not enough red or green not be acceptable when it tastes exactly the same?"

The MP estimates that between 10-20 per cent of our food can be rejected, but says it is also more costly for producers who have to ensure it meets the stringent standards set by big retailers.

She said: "They are spending more time and money ensuring this food is absolutely beautiful, which in itself is wasteful."

Mrs Sandys wants to set up a company to market the food under the 'Ugly' brand.

She said: "I am going to be speaking to the National Farmers Union and the British Retail Consortium to see if I can work with them as partners and take this forward."

"Having the word 'ugly' is important as part of the brand because it is also a message as well."

And the MP does not rule out the ugly food being sold on supermarket shelves.

She said: "Once the brand is established it can go into any outlet you wish. I would like to see it in supermarkets, but we would also be looking at smaller retailers and wholesalers who may end up selling it to places like restaurants."

The MP is not restricting the idea just to fruit and vegetables. She also says it could be used to sell fish such as pollock which is often considered less marketable than cod or haddock.

It could also be used to market meats that have fallen out of fashion with the modern consumer.

She said: "Things like kidneys and liver can be delicious, but they are rejected because we have stopped understanding how to cook them."

Most importantly the scheme would be part of trying to reduce ever-increasing food bills and help to make the country less reliant on expensive imports.

The MP said: "We are the largest importer of food in the developed world and one of the reasons we have had high inflation is because commodity prices have gone up when the pound is weak. We are very reliant on imports."

BIG IDEA: Thanet South MP Laura Sandys was surprised by what food is classed as unacceptable

"We really need a culture change when it comes to our food."

"It is rising in price which is obviously not desirable for families, so we are going to have to value everything that we grow more."

A BURGLAR who stole children's Christmas presents from a home in Aylesford has been imprisoned after leaving his smartphone – worth more than his haul – at the scene.

Daniel Manser, 23, of Malling Road, Snodland, was sentenced to 120 days imprisonment for the offence committed on December 20 in Lunsford Lane, Aylesford. He took presents including DVDs, a bracelet and gift vouchers from under the family Christmas tree.

➔ 'Don't phone and drive'

DRIVERS are being asked to switch off their mobile phones before turning on their cars. A survey as part of the Kent County Council campaign found that 10 per cent of drivers admitted to using a hand-held mobile phone, and 44 per cent used a hands-free phone, while driving.

It is illegal to use a hand-held mobile phone when driving and if caught, it will result in three points and a £60 fine.

A CANNABIS factory in Maidstone has been shut down after neighbourhood police officers got wind of a familiar scent and followed their noses to an address in Lenside Drive.

Around 20 cannabis plants were discovered in the house.

A 41 year-old man from Bearsted has been arrested on suspicion of cultivating cannabis. He has been released on bail until March 29.

Tory MPs demand showdown with Cameron over airport proposals

SIX Kent Tory MPs have signed a letter demanding an urgent meeting with Prime Minister David Cameron over proposals to build a multi-billion pound airport in the Thames Estuary.

Chatham's Tracey Crouch, Rochester and Strood's Mark Reckless and Gillingham and Rainham's Rehman Chishty all signed a letter opposing the plans, challenging their Conservative Party leader on his previous assertions there would be no airport in the area.

The letter is also signed by Sittingbourne and Sheppey's Gordon Henderson, Gravesend's Adam Holloway and Dartford's Gareth Johnson.

It comes just a week after a formal consultation was announced by the Government into the proposals.

In the letter sent this week to the PM, it says: "The proposals for an airport in the Thames Estuary do not appear to be supported by the public, or indeed the aviation industry."

"If any such proposal were to go ahead it would have an enormous effect on the lives of hundreds of thousands of residents living in the wider Thames Estuary region and devastate an area of global environmental significance."

"We are also concerned as to how the Government proposes to fund such a scheme given the estimated cost of £50 billion-£80bn based on the proposals set out by Lord Foster."

One plan – put forward by London Mayor Boris Johnson and dubbed 'Boris Island' – would see land in the estuary reclaimed from the sea.

Another, suggested by architect Lord Foster, would see an airport built on Grain.

And while it would create potentially thousands of jobs and inject millions into the local economy, the proposals would also destroy protected areas, turn marshland into industrial sites, and see a huge surge in road traffic.

The letter adds: "We strongly urge the Government not to proceed with these proposals and look instead at fully utilising the capacity of existing airports in the South East, and others such as Birmingham, which will now benefit from the new HS2 high-speed rail link to London in 30-40 minutes."

It also accuses the Government of a U-turn on the plans, pointing out that on October 27 last year, during Prime Minister's Questions, in response to a question from Mr Chishty, "you stated the Government had no plans to construct a new airport in the area."

It added: "The Government's position was recently restated in letters from the minister for aviation, Theresa Villiers" in letters to both Mr Reckless and Ms Crouch.

David Cameron is understood to be open to the suggestion of a meeting as the airport proposals gather pace.

Pilot's joy as oven cleaning expert clears jets in a flash

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WHAT'S more annoying? A filthy oven that sends smoke around your kitchen, or grubby jet engines on your Cold War spyplane?

Well for pilot Mustafa Azim the two problems turned out to be identical – which is where oven cleaning expert Jonathan Chambers came into it.

Mustafa, who was a captain for Air Atlanta, snapped up a Pzłiska TD11 jet, made in Poland using the Russian MiG 15 design.

The spy plane is currently being renovated in a hanger at Manston airport near Ramsgate, but Mustafa had severe engine problems.

He said: "The engine just wasn't running properly, there was a misfire and it was flaming out."

"It needed proper cleaning and I was at a loss to know what to do. My wife Mamu had hired a professional cleaner for our five-year-old oven at home and he made it look brand new."

"I got talking to him and he said an aircraft jet engine is basically a bit like an oven, or at least all the metalwork that surrounds it."

"So I took Jonathan down to Manston and he took a look at my plane and said he could easily do it. I had been to Bulgaria looking for an engineer to do the job and found one that was going to charge me 1,300 euros a day to come over."

"Jonathan said he'd do it over four days for a total of £500. I am very pleased, and the work done so far has been spectacular."

Mustafa, 45, from south London, bought the plane on a whim for just under £7,000 when he was supposed to be getting a new car.

He said: "My wife thought I was crazy."

Jonathan, from Otford, runs his own company Magiclean.

He said: "Basically in an oven there is a lot of burned on carbon and it's the same with the jet parts. I was happy to help out."

ROAD SAFETY

Revealed: The roads where the highest numbers of speeding motorists are caught on camera

By Marijke Cox

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT'S top 10 speed cameras have been revealed – with the busiest trapping more than 1,560 speeding motorists in just one year.

According to figures from the Kent and Medway Safety Camera Partnership, 23,787 drivers were caught in 2010, with some 1,564 – four a day – snapped by the fixed safety camera on the A229 Loose Road in Maidstone.

A further 1,080 were caught on the A264 Pembury Road in Tunbridge Wells.

Details of offences at fixed camera sites have now been published on the Safety Camera Partnership's website, in addition to crash and casualty rates.

According to the data, there has been a 74 per cent reduction in the number of people killed or seriously injured across fixed and mobile camera sites in the county since 2002 – the equivalent of around 397 people.

Chief Insp Andy Reeves, head of roads policing for Kent Police and chair of the Kent and Medway Safety Camera Partnership, said despite a reduction in resources over the last year, the organisation wanted to show residents how cameras were helping to reduce casualties.

"The casualty figures speak for themselves and show that safety cameras have reduced the number of people killed or seriously injured at camera sites," he said. "Where casualties or speeds have not been reduced sufficiently, the local authorities have these sites under review."

While the busiest cameras caught hundreds of speeding motorists, several saw no tickets issued at all.

Chief Insp Reeve said: "This is because there was either complete compliance with the speed limit or there was no live camera in the unit while maintenance was being carried out.

"Where sites show no tickets from the fixed camera this does not mean that no enforcement was carried out there; safety camera vans 'back up' fixed cameras by enforcing within the signed area.

"Also, when looking at ticket numbers, traffic volume should be taken into account; for example, where traffic volumes are high, there may be more tickets issued than on a stretch of road where there are fewer vehicles."

But while the partnership praised the use of cameras across Kent and Medway, the Association of British Drivers (ABD) said most people caught are not driving dangerously.

An ABD spokesman said: "Around 82 per cent of speed camera victims thought they were driving safely at the time of their conviction and were just unfortunate to be doing a few miles over the limit."

He added that the reduction in fatalities and serious injury was a result of advancements in vehicle safety and not due to speed cameras.

Forgotten WWII camp that saved thousands of Jews from Holocaust

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE lost story of how the people of Sandwich played a key role in saving thousands of men from certain death at the hands of the Nazis in the Holocaust has been revealed.

In November, 1938, the Nazi authorities in Germany rounded up more than 30,000 Jewish men and detained them in concentration camps.

If the men could get entry visas for foreign countries and emigrate immediately they were allowed to leave.

For those without money or connections abroad it was an impossible race against time.

But more than 4,000 were saved, thanks to a small group of people – the Central British Fund for German Jewry – doing all they could to enable the men to come to Kent and find refuge at Richborough, near Sandwich.

Between February-September, 1939, the men came to Britain on transit visas and were given safe haven at an old and rundown World War One training base – The Kitchener Camp.

BBC TV show Inside Out tracked down the men and women of the time to discover how the locals took the people of another country and culture to their hearts.

Many of the Kitchener Camp veterans were skilled, such as doctors, engineers, builders, writers, musicians, carpenters, and university professors. One was a professional photographer.

They produced numerous diaries, drawings, plans and photographs of rare quality.

Once war broke out most of the men, being German, were considered 'enemy aliens', but were eventually given the opportunity to join the Pioneer Corp and fight for Britain against Germany. In all 3,000 of them signed up.

There is, however, a tragic side to this story.

The men with wives and children expected their families to follow soon after, but circumstances changed quickly. War broke out and most of them could not escape from Germany and died in concentration camps.

CAMP HOPE:

The Kitchener Camp at Richborough, Sandwich, was home to thousands of Jewish men who escaped death by being transported from Germany to England neer Corp after leaving the camp and served in the British Army for six years.

Mr Rossney, 92, now lives in London with his wife after a successful career as a designer, and has family in Cranbrook. He says the camp saved his life.

"I arrived in Kent on March 8, 1939, after I'd been an apprentice in Berlin, at a terrible time as the Nazis took power. Under their laws I couldn't work for an 'Aryan' and the only job I could find was delivering goods on a bicycle," he said.

"I was half Jewish and didn't look particularly Semitic so I didn't have the problems many people had. I could walk the streets without being beaten up.

"But getting to England saved my life, as two weeks later I would have been conscripted into the German Army and that would have probably been the end of me.

"I don't know who put me forward for the camp to this day. All I know is that they saved my life. The area had been acquired by the British-Jewish community to house refugees and they had obtained permission to rebuild it.

But they needed 200 tradesmen and I was a sign-writer, so I was asked to come over. In fact I was number 196.

"When I arrived I was given overalls and rubber boots and we all worked day and night to put up huts, level roads and install such things as showers. Each hut could take 48 refugees and in the end we provided shelter for 3,600 Jews.

"I came to England and couldn't speak a word of the language. But the people and the country were wonderful.

"Even when at school I had loved the idea of England as a sort of fairyland. England in German translates roughly as 'angel-land' and that is how I saw it. The land of angels.

"I tried to fit in as quickly as I could. I loved everything about it, the freedom, the laughing faces, the relaxed atmosphere, the opposite of Germany at the time."

Mr Rossney joined the Pioneer Corps of the British Army, working in the camp and then further afield constructing roads and installations. Three weeks after D-Day he was in France.

He said: "I was happy with my unit, but orders then came through from General Montgomery's headquarters re-assigning me. I didn't want it, didn't ask for it, but couldn't do anything about it.

"Casualties had been huge and the bodies needed to be buried. I was the only signwriter for a hundred miles so they wanted me to inscribe the names of the fallen onto the hundreds of crosses which had been taken out to France for the military cemeteries.

"Speaking French, German and English I ended up in charge of a team with the rank of sergeant, made up of disabled British troops, German prisoners of war and French civilians."

Other stories of Jews escaping the Holocaust have been well documented such as the work by Oscar Schindler, but in spite of the numbers of people saved, the Kitchener Camp, which was unique, has essentially been forgotten.

Only a few of the men from the camp are alive today.

CELEBRATIONS

Throwing a party for the Queen's Diamond Jubilee couldn't be easier

By Marijke Cox

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ROYAL street party fever looks set to sweep the county in June as preparations begin for Queen Elizabeth's Diamond Jubilee celebrations.

Last year saw Kent topping the list of areas with the most street parties as communities brought out the bunting for the Royal Wedding of Prince William and Kate Middleton.

Thousands took to the streets, with more than 180 parties taking place across Kent and Medway.

And if early predictions are correct, there could be even more celebrations this year.

County Hall chiefs have called on the public to seize the opportunity to celebrate the historic occasion.

To prepare for the expected flood of applications, Kent County Council is already inviting residents to apply for road closures over any day during the extended four-day holiday, from June 2-5.

Cabinet member for environment, highways and waste, Cllr Bryan Sweetland, said the authority was waiving charges for street parties on quiet residential roads and cul-de-sacs.

"This 'can do' relaxed approach will allow people to organise a Diamond Jubilee celebration with neighbours in a traffic-free street, giving children the chance to play freely for a change," he said.

"We are aiming to repeat the success of Kent's Royal Wedding street party scheme, when we were one of the top local authorities for the number of residential street parties.

"This was achieved by making the application process very easy. Organisers only have to complete a simple online form.

"In addition, there is no charge for processing applications or for the road closure signs that we will provide.

"This means parties in quiet residential roads and cul-de-sacs can be held for free."

He added: "We wish Her Majesty every happiness and

VISIT: The Queen in Margate

hope residents in Kent will seize the opportunity to celebrate this historic occasion."

According to the Local Government Association (LGA), public interest in Royal celebrations has recently soared and predictions suggest the number of street parties will significantly surpass last year's total for the Royal nuptials.

Despite still being five months away, councils are being inundated with enquiries from residents wanting to mark the Jubilee. The deadline for party applications is Friday, May 18.

Organisers can fill in an application form online at www.kent.gov.uk/news\_and\_events/diamond\_jubilee.aspx.

For streets in Medway go to www.medway.gov.uk/communityandliving/street-parties.aspx.

Companies to be paid to hire unemployed youngsters

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH almost 9,000 young people aged between 18-24 out of work in Kent, the county council has come up with a revolutionary plan to fight back – directly paying employers a subsidy to take them on.

Kent County Council's customer and communities policy overview and scrutiny committee has discussed the proposal, but full approval won't be until March at the earliest.

The first jobs won't be until April.

The authority would hand over £3,000 to an employer hiring a non-graduate for 18 months, and £6,000 for a graduate.

County Hall recently introduced its Big Society Fund, and this employment scheme would use £2 million from that, plus hopefully government funds, which need to be applied for.

The authority would target companies with less than 50 workers already on their books, but the firms could be from almost any business area, such as private, public, organisations and social enterprises. It is designed to get youngsters out of a "cycle of unemployment".

Councillors were told the authority has recent experience of delivering employment opportunities through the successful delivery of 890 jobs by the Future Jobs Fund (FJF).

A report said: "This successful delivery ensured £5.5m of funding was accessed by public and third sector organisations in Kent.

"Of those young people completing their six-month FJF placement 40 per cent moved straight into employment, in line with the national average, whilst for the 81 graduates who were helped this figure rises to 63 per cent."

Long-term employment in the age group has recently quadrupled. Supporting independence manager Wayne Gough told members that while £2m is a lot of money, it won't immediately deal with all the county's unemployed – but is a start.

Cllr Mike Hill, cabinet spokesman for communities, said: "Young people who have been out of work for a long time lose the confidence and the ability to get a job and we are trying to make sure we help the young people of Kent."

Nationally, the average unemployment rate for this age group is around 22 per cent – a record high level.

Cllr Hill added: "KCC recognises that young people are struggling to get their first step on the career ladder due to a lack of work experience and the challenges employers are facing in the economic climate.

"This is completely demoralising for young people who, by no fault of their own, are not being given a chance to prove themselves.

"We are hoping that by encouraging and supporting local small and medium enterprises to take on young people, we will make some headway in breaking this vicious cycle and get more young people into employment."

Foreign lorry levy 'must be spent on fixing roads'

By Marijke Cox

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

COUNTY Hall chiefs have demanded that money raised by Government's proposed £10-a-day foreign lorry charge be ploughed back into road repairs and transport schemes.

Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter, said unless funds were handed to councils to fix roads damaged by HGVs, the charge would have no beneficial impact.

"A significant amount of money can be raised, but if we can't get a cast-iron guarantee that the money will be given back to the councils that pay to fix the damage caused, then it achieves nothing."

He said KCC would also be putting pressure on the Government to allow funds to help with key transport schemes, such as the Third Thames Crossing and a solution to Operation Stack, when lorries are parked on the M20 during Channel crossing disruption.

FEE: Calls have been made for the cash raised from foreign lorries to be spent on Kent roads

The system causes parts of the road network to grind to a halt and costs the UK haulage industry £1 million a day. Its management has also cost Kent Police and Highways Agency some £3m since it was first implemented 20 years ago.

Cllr Carter's comments came in response to a proposal set out this week by the Department for Transport which could see foreign lorry drivers charged £10 per day to use British roads.

British HGV drivers will also have to pay, but they will be reimbursed through reductions in vehicle tax or fuel duty.

Currently, this country is one of the only places in the EU which does not charge HGV drivers to use its roads.

Since 1992, KCC has been pushing for a levy on foreign lorries coming through the Port of Dover. The county shoulders the main HGV burden – primarily on the M2 and M20 – with thousands of lorries coming to and from Europe every day.

But Cllr Carter warned the system could place "unnecessary burdens" on British haulage firms.

The Tunbridge Wells-based Freight Transport Association's chief economist Simon Chapman said: "The devil is in the detail and FTA will make sure the final proposal works for, and not against, the industry. For this system to work it needs to be both revenue neutral and not administratively burdensome for UK hauliers."

The consultation will run for three months.

Rebranding exercise shows college is focused on future

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

THANET College is in the process of a major rebranding exercise to better reflect its future ambitions.

The further education centre, that has its main campus in Ramsgate Road, Broadstairs, wants to highlight recent changes to its facilities and courses.

Penelope Kimber, head of marketing at the college, said: "We want to show the college is changing and we are heading in a new direction."

The rebranding may mean a new name for the college, which was originally known as Thanet Technical College when it opened in the 1950s. One of its most famous students is the celebrity chef Gary Rhodes.

Ms Kimber said: "There are a lot of parts of the college that are new and different from the past. We are doing things that are exciting and attractive, particularly to young people."

"We may want to have a new name to communicate that.

STUDENT LIFE: Thanet College

"There may have been a feeling in the past that the college is always there to fall back on. It's important for applicants to realise we can be seen as a first choice when they are 16 or as students when they are older."

At a time when young people can mount up large debts by opting for university, colleges want to reposition themselves as a credible alternative.

Ms Kimber said: "Young people are conscious of what things like loans will mean for their future. People who come to us will have a different experience, but with high standards. There are many new courses that can be studied. From September we will have 35 new courses. Ten of those are new and exciting ways to study as an alternative to going to university.

"People can stay local and get an idea of what it is like to make those first steps on the higher education ladder."

The college has employed an agency to carry out the rebranding exercise. It has just begun consulting with local people to see if a new name and brand would be more attractive to prospective students.

A major new development will be a new environmental technology centre due to open in 2013.

Ms Kimber said: "We have a very attractive packages with courses that allow people to study alongside work and still have a fantastic qualification at the end of the year."

"We hope to have the whole rebranding process finished and ready for the new term in September."

ROAD SAFETY

High-speed motorists face pupils rather than take fine

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

SHAMEFACED motorists have been told the error of their ways by schoolchildren in two village schools near Canterbury.

Drivers caught speeding by police outside Barham and Chartham primary schools were given two options: they could either get a fine and three points on their licence, or be confronted by the children to discuss why they had been travelling too fast.

The initiative was organised by the Canterbury Neighbourhood Team and Kent Police traffic officers. Motorists driving over the 30mph speed limit outside a school would normally face a £60 fine.

Officers spent a morning at Barham Primary School last week and then did the same at Chartham Primary School in the afternoon.

At Barham three drivers breaking the speed limit were stopped and agreed to talk to waiting children about their speeding.

Emily Slater, 18, whose speed was measured at 38mph, said: "Talking to the children was more effective than getting a fine. The toughest question I was asked was how I would feel if I killed a child through speeding. I didn't know how to answer that."

LESSON: Police helped pupils confront the drivers

At Chartham Primary six speeding drivers opted to speak to Year Six children. A seventh opted to go for the fixed penalty rather than face the grilling from the children.

PC Mandy Poulter from the Canterbury Neighbourhood Team said: "The operation was all about educating motorists about the dangers of speeding. We believe that hearing directly from children about the dangers of speeding makes a much more lasting impression."

Deputy headteacher at Barham Primary School, Jo Duhig, welcomed the initiative.

She said: "The children have learned an awful lot about road safety and it's great to have the police here. It's a great community project."

PSCO Chris Chapman, who organised the operation, added: "We also did this at the two schools in September. At Barham eight speeding drivers were spoken to and at Chartham the number was 12. Hopefully the fall in numbers shows that the message is hitting home."

House needs a little help from its friends

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A WORLD famous and historic Medway landmark is in need of care and is appealing for residents to help in its rebirth.

The newly formed Friends of Eastgate House need help this year after they were awarded a development grant of up to £80,000 from the Heritage Lottery Fund.

It is part of a £1 million grant application to restore the building and transform it into an exhibition gallery and community space where all kinds of events can be held.

The Heritage Lottery Fund has been working with the council during the first phase of development work, which includes creating a Friends' group in support of the project.

The group's first meeting was held last week to shape the way the building with its 16th century interior is used in the future.

It is generally closed to the public but, with the help of volunteers, that is set to change.

The Friends' group was established to give people a chance to support Eastgate House even if they do not have time to give up to volunteer.

The work is worthwhile – Eastgate House is steeped in history and is an instantly recognisable building in Rochester, often favoured by filmmakers, particularly if there is a Dickens connection.

Also, its Grade-I listed status makes it nationally important. Architecturally, it is one of the finest town houses of its period in Kent, if not in England.

THE FUTURE: Supporters are needed for Eastgate House

The ownership and occupancy is a complex tale.

Five generations of the Buck family were associated with the house. The first two, both named Peter, held high office under the Crown and in 1604 Peter II became Clerk of the Cheque at Chatham.

The Buck family's connection with the house appears to have ended in 1687 although there may have been a family connection with the next owners, the Parkers.

The Parkers were followed by the Bartholomews, who held the house until the mid-18th century.

Then in 1761 the house was held by Annabel Darwin, but possibly let to tenants. James Reed was the occupier in 1791 and it may have been Reed or his widow who first set up a school there.

By 1841 it was under the governorship of Rebecca Norton and there were 14 boarders. It was in this guise that Charles Dickens incorporated it – as The Nuns' House – into his last, unfinished, novel The Mystery of Edwin Drood.

It once again became a private dwelling in the 1870s, as the home of Samuel Shaw, a wholesale coal merchant.

Its transition to a young men's hostel in 1890 appears to have been fairly brief as it had become a temperance restaurant by 1897, when Rochester City Council resolved to turn it into a municipal library and museum in celebration of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee. Conversion for that purpose cost £3,000 and seems to have taken some time, as it was not officially opened as the museum until 1903.

In 1923 an extension to the museum, a new formal garden and a caretaker's cottage – Eastgate Cottage – were funded by a legacy from Thomas Hell-year Foord, a member of a local shipbuilding family. The architect was Sir Guy Dawber, who also designed the Foord Almshouses in Priestfields.

The Dickens Chalet was relocated here from Cobham Hall in 1961. In 1979 the museum was moved to the Guildhall, and Eastgate House, including the Foord Annex, became the Dickens Centre, with displays devoted to the author's life and works. Dawber's garden layout was replaced by the present one in 1981.

The Dickens Centre closed on October 31, 2004.

I will put the victims first

Police and Crime Commissioner hopeful Colonel Tim Collins wants us all to play our part in tackling crime in Kent and catching criminals

SINCE I announced last October that I wanted to be Kent's first elected Police and Crime Commissioner, I have been talking to people across the county, listening to their views and sharing mine.

One message has come through loud and clear: policing matters. That is why it is so important that in the coming months we have a sensible debate about policing and crime.

Sir Robert Peel, the founder of modern policing, said: "The police are the public, and the public are the police."

I believe strongly the people of Kent need to feel a greater degree of ownership over their force – not in the sense of interfering with operational independence, but in having a bigger role in how it is run and how they're given information about what is done and why.

I want to overhaul the Special Constabulary and create valuable new ways of volunteering in a police reserve.

At its peak, the country had over 136,000 specials – Kent now has fewer than 400. There are many fine men and women serving the community in this capacity, but I want to introduce a new tier which is around people giving what time they can, and ultimately acting as a strategic reserve to be used during crisis situations (such as last August's disorder which gripped the country) or for use on days of action when particular crime types are focused on and the county is locked down for the criminal.

I would like to see a council tax discount for those who volunteer to serve, as a thank you for their contribution.

I want greater transparency of operational information to harness and engage the power of the people in solving crime. For example, why shouldn't we have a local equivalent of the sort of top 10 'wanted list' that you see the FBI use to great effect? Shouldn't we all be contributing to running down the criminals causing the greatest harm in Kent and working with the force to bring them to justice? Working together, we can make a difference.

Victims should be updated and have complete transparency about every stage of their investigation, with an audit trail of who has done what and when to bring offenders to justice. I will ensure that if you are a victim of crime, you will have a right to that information in an easily accessible format.

And the wider public too must know not just that crime has been committed, but what the outcome of the investigation and the court process was.

There is one group who seem to me to get the worst deal in the criminal justice system,

It seems to me that victims get the worst deal in the criminal justice system and that is victims. Once a victim experiences the criminal justice system, they believe it to be less fair and their confidence drops compared with the expectations of non-victims.

A third of people feel that victims' rights are respected, compared to 80 per cent who think the rights of criminals are respected.

This needs to be turned on its head, and the police, the courts, and the Crown Prosecution Service need to put the victim first in everything they do.

Charging decisions need to be faster and in the interests of the victim not some set of Whitehall targets.

Justice needs to be faster, and not dragged out to suit the felon. The criminal needs to be afraid of committing crime in Kent, and victims must know that the system is on their side.

■ Col Tim Collins lives in Whitstable

KOS COMMENT

We're on the road to a solution – at long last

FINALLY the Government has seen sense and is planning to charge foreign hauliers for using our roads.

It may have taken 20 years of campaigning to reach this point, but we got there in the end.

Not only could the £10-a-day charge help pay for major road projects like the Third Thames Crossing or a solution to Operation Stack, but it could – and should – fund repairs on the M2 and M20 caused by the thousands of lorries that use Kent's roads every day.

As the gateway to England, Kent has suffered long enough with problems caused by lorries travelling to and from the Continent and it's about time the county was given a little help shouldering the burden.

Original tower raffle mystery

CORRECT me if I am wrong, but wasn't there a sale of raffle tickets for charity with the winner given the opportunity to press the button to 'blow-up' the Richborough Towers? I think this sale was in the 1990s.

Would be interesting to know whether the winning ticket holder is still alive?

Medway's not ready for this

I'M SORRY, but I do not agree with the proposed airport on the Thames Estuary, my reasons being:

In all the talks I see no mention of the affect to the Medway towns. There only has to been an accident on the M2 closing the motorway, and the all of the Medway towns are at a stand still. And as for the Wainscott bypass at peak times – it's traffic jams.

I feel that it will be one big disaster for all.

Mrs Harris, by email

Manston right path for MPs

WHEN will politicians think with their heads, and not what is good for them in the longer term.

Manston has to be a far better option to develop than a completely new venture in the Thames Estuary.

I agree that Boris Johnson seems to be thinking about himself, yet again, and it would seem his fellow Tories are supporting him because of the upcoming mayor election.

Manston has all the basics needed, and development of the airport would be faster, cheaper, and would generate much-needed employment – both during and after the development.

What do people have to do to make politicians think logically?

Rod Charman, by email

A new airport is just the job

HAVING read last week's article by Ed Hill and the mass hysteria by the media, I really do wish there could be a more honest and balanced debate about the airport issue.

I do not know or have spoken to anyone who is opposed to this airport.

North Kent is in serious need of the employment this would bring. A cursory visit to many of the towns in the area would show the general decay, rundown high streets and poor investment.

This modern airport with modern aircraft would have far less impact than the millions of tonnes of freight coming into the UK via the container port at Grain or along the two main arterial routes through Dover.

We in the South East have not fared as well as many of our northern towns have in terms of investment. When politicians join the fray and voice their opposition there is usually a hidden political agenda and their views should be carefully scrutinised.

Are they reflecting the views of the majority? I think not...

Evolution means we are no longer living in caves.

Airports are being built all over the globe, each and every one will impact on the natural environment in some way, but nature adapts and re-adjusts – it always does.

This airport is badly needed, our area is in much need of employment and here is a 'gift horse' the like of which we have not seen in decades.

If we do not build this airport someone else will. So my message and that of my friends and acquaintances and probably the silent majority is

'bring it on!', let's put Kent on the world stage.

John Moore, by email

Polite drivers drive me mad

CAN we please put an end to the well-meaning scourge of our already-overcongested inner city road networks; the Gives Way Unnecessarily driver.

These pointlessly care-free, courteous motorists pull in at the mere sight of a parked car, before merrily flicking their lights to allow the driver heading in the opposite direction an obstructed route onto their destination.

All well and good when the road is narrow. But when the distance between the edge of the parked car and the other side of the road is greater than the combined width of two Sherman tanks then there is no need to give way.

By grinding to a halt behind the parked car, 'allowing' the approaching vehicle to proceed, all the Gives Way Unnecessarily driver has achieved is adding more time to their journey, and, more importantly and frustratingly, added more time to mine and the others behind me.

Motorists, please take heed.

All aboard the railway fiasco

MP Sir Roger Gale (KoS, January 22) is totally right in that the fast train route should be extended to Thanet.

At present the current, so-called, high-speed service has lengthened the journey times for the vast majority of rail users in Kent and in most cases times were quicker by steam trains (e.g. London to Whitstable was regularly achieved in under one hour yet the high-speed train takes about one-and-a-half hours).

Drivers are complaining that these 'kamikaze' trains are holding up the proper trains. It would be better if these were kept to lines which are supplied with 25kV AC power.

In reality from St Pancras to Ashford, with a connecting service at Ebbsfleet for north Kent towns, Medway and eastwards would be better off with a non-stop service (from Chatham) to Victoria or London Bridge.

It would be quicker for Ramsgate if a fast service went to London Bridge with stops only at Canterbury and Ashford.

Another fiasco is Eurostar...

Consider a passenger who wants to travel, by train, from Kent to the south of France. Eurostar suggest that they first go to St Pancras then to Paris Nord and cross Paris to Paris Lyon. What tosh, when there is a perfectly good service from Lille Europe to both Perpignan and Marseille that does not go through Paris.

It would be very easy to blame all this on Sir Roger as he supported the privatisation of the railways, but I believe he did not approve of the way they were privatised.

The Loonies would nationalise the rail service and bring back Thomas the Tank Engine managed by the Fat Controller.

New foundation chief eyes challenge ahead

PARTNERSHIPS: Alastair Upton

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

ONE of the guiding lights who helped make Liverpool's tenure as European City of Culture such a success has taken the role of chief executive at the Creative Foundation, the organisation tasked with regenerating Folkestone through the arts.

Alastair Upton, 48, moved with his family to the south Kent town from Merseyside on taking up the role this month.

He says he is looking forward to the new challenge but feels the regeneration of a town is something that takes place over some years.

"You cannot achieve it in a short period of time – regeneration is a multi-generational project," he said.

"Education is one of the key points. The Creative Foundation has already brought higher-education opportunities to the town and we want to work alongside schools to give young people the chance to take part in creative studies.

"These need not be just traditional arts – they can be such things as media, web design or advertising. Then, by attracting businesses in this sector to the town, we can create job opportunities for them."

Upton sees parallels between Folkestone and Liverpool.

"Liverpool is a post-industrial city, with its shipbuilding and a port which is still there but does not employ people in the same number as it did in the past," he said.

"Then there are all the merchant jobs that went alongside it as a major maritime city. It used to be Britain's second city – even being referred to as the second city of empire.

"The parallel with Folkestone, a former fishing port with cross-Channel links which was a major holiday resort in Edwardian times, is that both places had a clearly-defined sense of who they were, which because of the times we now live in is no longer the case.

"For Liverpool it was the decline of heavy industry and for Folkestone changing patterns for holidays."

During his time on Merseyside, Upton ran Bluecoat, Liverpool's oldest building situated on a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Recognised as the city's creative and artistic hub, it played a central role in the 2008 City of Culture activities, which saw 15 million visits to arts venues and events, a rise of 30 per cent on 2007.

The Liverpool Culture Company, the umbrella group for the event, reported an £800 million boost to the region's economy.

Warren Bradley, then leader of Liverpool City Council, said: "The experience of being European capital of culture has reshaped Liverpool – the way it looks, thinks and acts."

Referring to that pivotal year, Upton said: "Bluecoat was re-developed for the year, with greater retail facilities as well as staging major events. We also held outreach programmes bringing our projects to some of the harder-to-reach areas.

"The event made an enormous difference to the way the city was perceived.

"Of course it could not address all the issues, but from being a place associated with crime and poverty it became recognised for culture. This, in turn, brought tourists and greater inward investment.

"There are areas of significant deprivation in Folkestone and the Creative Foundation is tasked to help them."

Upton feels that the Triennial, which he first heard about when working on arts projects in Brighton, is a key part of the Folkestone renaissance.

"It has a very high reputation, both across the UK and abroad, putting the town on the contemporary-arts map" he said.

"But it is one part of the challenge facing the Creative Foundation. We also need to focus on the day-to-day challenges, such as retail. We have a vibrant, intensely-successful place in the Creative Quarter and we need to build on it.

"One of the things we did very successfully in Liverpool was to forge partnerships with other organisations.

"We need to work creatively and imaginatively with other organisations for our mutual benefit."

TRAINING

That Nail And Beauty Place is the centre for learning

THAT Nail And Beauty Place, in Folkestone, has been a highly-successful business for over 15 years and has a wide reputation for professionalism and customer service.

A trend-setter within the industry, it was the first salon in the area to offer airbrush tanning, coloured gel nail treatments, eyelash extensions and semi-permanent make-up.

The company is fully endorsed with professional standards and has a fully-accredited training academy that can offer qualifications recognised within the industry and will satisfy insurance criteria.

It recruits, trains and places apprentices in nail and beauty salons in Kent and partners large training organisations such as K College and Keith Graham Hair Academy

The company also offers work-based courses as well as private sessions, which means visiting salons across the county to help up-skill the workforce. This helps small businesses to improve their profit margins.

The company can also offer fully-funded NVQ qualifications in beauty therapy or nail services as well as a different learning environment.

The firm has a roll-on roll-off schedule, which means trainees can start as soon as they like without having to wait until September.

That Nail And Beauty Place does not discriminate about your circumstances – anyone can apply and the academy has guaranteed placements that are funded.

It also offers treatments by the students at cost price and can be phoned on 01303 256305.

GROWTH

Lab expands with new equipment

ASHFORD-based Medical Engineering Technologies has added new space and equipment to its laboratory in Stanford North.

The company supplies support and analytical services to medical device, personal care and pharmaceutical manufacturers.

The new suite includes gas chromatographic mass spectroscopy. The extreme sensitivity of this method allows the analysis of a large range of materials and so the service is useful in forensics, drug analysis, process testing in plastics and metal production, soil analysis and for contamination investigations. A current project searches for residual chemicals on eye surgery blades.

Managing director Mark Turner said: "We are proud of our expanding facilities. We endeavour to provide exemplary service to our clients.

"This and the reliability of our work has led to considerable expansion of our company in recent years. Our team really do work diligently to produce accurate results, often when working to challenging time requirements."

ENVIRONMENT

Car-wash firm is Hands On for eco efforts

EBBSFLEET manual-car-wash company Hands On has been recognised for its commitment to developing an environmentally-friendly hand-car-wash service at a private awards ceremony held at the Houses of Parliament.

The business was presented with the Green Mark Level 2 award by Adam Holloway, MP for Gravesham, and commended on its drive to take lasting action.

Hands On was awarded Green Mark Level 1 in 2009 for its environmentally-friendly approach to car washing. The company has now progressed to the higher Level 2 award, demonstrating its commitment to environmental responsibility and the value it brings to the company.

Bob Dine, commercial director, said: "We are absolutely delighted to pick up yet another environmental award acknowledging our efforts to provide a truly green service for our customers."

"It's taken five years of reviewing and refining every single process, material and procedure to get to this stage, but we're now confident that we offer customers a far greener way to clean their cars without having to compromise on quality."

"While we're incredibly proud of our achievements so far, we know this is an ongoing journey and we're determined to continue developing our processes to further reduce the environmental impact of the business."

Biz Buzz makes a big deal of enterprise and creation

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A NEW initiative to promote business in the county has taken place in Deal in the form of the Kent Biz Buzz.

The venue was the Astor Community Theatre and companies from east Kent and farther afield used it as an opportunity to network.

The event was set up to offer a taste of the enterprise and creativity that local businesses are undertaking at a time when the economic climate is uncertain and many companies are facing problems.

In his introduction to Biz Buzz, Keith Morrison, of Ascenda Strategy And Marketing, said its objective was "to make it clear that east Kent is well and truly open for business".

Speakers included Naz Khaliq, of the Dynamix Group, which provides development and consultancy support; social media and online expert Jo Dodds; customer-service adviser Graham Seymour; and personal and career-development coach Gillian McDonagh.

A team from HM Customs was also on hand to advise on tax responsibilities for businesses and a private session for some of the exhibitors was organised with Bank of England deputy agent Alex Gollidge as keynote speaker.

One of the sponsors was national business 4Networking, which held sessions in networking to get the event off to a good start.

Managing director Terry Cooper said: "I go to events like this all across the country and this is a particularly good one. There is a really positive atmosphere around."

Peter Varrall, of Deal-based Castles, which specialises in removals, storage and shipping, was one of the exhibitors.

He said: "I am very pleased to be here and have received a lot of enquiries."

Carol Wilkinson, of Alpaca Creative, based in Ash, said: "There has been a real buzz about the place, so it has lived up to its name."

Sharing her stand was Nigel Stevenson, of the

BUZZ: There was a great atmosphere at the event

Deal website-design company Oast House Media. He said: "These events are something I would like to see more of as they really do bring businesses together, enabling them to network and work with each other as well as share expertise. Word-of-mouth referral is the best sought there is and I am seeing plenty of that taking place."

ANNIVERSARY

Birthday celebrations heat up with a full year of offers and giveaways

SWALE Heating is celebrating its 40th anniversary in 2012 and will be sharing the occasion with customers.

To mark the anniversary, the company has joined forces with Worcester Bosch to give away prizes valued at £2,000.

Worcester Bosch, a part of the international Bosch Group, is recognised as a market leader in household technology. It celebrates 50 years in business in 2012 and its collaboration with Swale Heating marks the shared anniversaries.

Matthew Edwards, Swale Heating sales director, said: "It is an achievement for any business to reach its 40th anniversary, but to be able to work alongside such a global brand is a very proud moment for Swale Heating."

"It is also very generous of Worcester Bosch to pledge these prizes to our customers. At a time when many people are tightening their belts and large household items are perhaps seen as a luxury, this giveaway should give four lucky winners a great start to 2012."

In addition to its partnership with Worcester Bosch, Swale Heating plans a year-long series of 2012 anniversary celebrations for customers and staff.

Edwards said: "We employ more than 400 staff in Kent and look after 100,000 customers. All these people play a part in our business and its ongoing success. As we look forward to the next 40 years we want to say thank you."

Until Saturday, March 31, every person who calls Swale Heating for a quote on a new Worcester boiler will be entered into a monthly prize draw to win £500 of Bosch appliances.

Careers advice a click away for those wanting to raise their prospects

WEBSITES continue to be a way for those looking to increase their skills in the workplace to gain valuable information.

Prospects.ac.uk attracts more than 40,000 daily browsers and has the highest number of page impressions recorded since before the recession, according to the latest figures from the Audit Bureau of Circulations Electronic (ABCE).

The figures show the Graduate Prospects website's status as one of the biggest and busiest sources for student and graduates careers information, advice and jobs.

There continue to be more than one million monthly unique browsers on Prospects.ac.uk and page impressions have leapt to 2007 levels at a daily average of 200,309.

Mike Hill, chief executive of Graduate Prospects, said: "Despite the difficult economic climate, we haven't stopped investing in our business and our profile, and we continue to cut through what is a challenging and volatile market by improving, growing and diversifying.

"There are becoming fewer channels of careers support available and therefore people are coming to us for information and advice. These are uncertain times, so people are turning to sources that they trust."

Prospects.ac.uk traffic has been boosted by improvements to the website, new and engaging content, further investment in online marketing and search-engine optimisation.

Mr Hill said: "The high and sustained traffic to our website is also testament to our close partnership with university careers services, and I'd like to thank their staff for directing students and graduates to our pages."

ST LAWRENCE COLLEGE

College offers a bright start to a child's future

Every parent wants to ensure their child is given the best possible start in life and the chosen school plays a very large part in future successes.

St Lawrence College in Ramsgate is a coeducational day and boarding school educating children aged from three to 18.

Set in large expansive grounds, boasting modern and traditional architecture, it includes exceptional sporting facilities such as a sports hall, climbing wall, astro-turfs, tennis and squash courts, a swimming pool, gym and dance studio. The school prides itself on meeting the sporting dreams and aspirations of its pupils, allowing them to develop new skills, try new sports and perfect sporting talent.

Every child is allowed to develop their individuality and grow into confident, polite and caring adults.

Whether a child is academically-minded or excels in sports, music or the arts, the school prides itself on the ability to provide tailored education to meet the needs of every individual.

The school is continually developing its facilities to ensure that children of today and tomorrow have the ability to benefit from both traditional and modern facilities and technologies.

Current developments include a new theatre and girls' boarding house, both of which are due for completion in the summer of 2012.

Pupils and staff are proud to be part of the St Lawrence College community and to reinforce how great the school is; it has recently had an Independent Schools Inspectorate (ISI) inspection, from which the school received an 'excellent' report, commending the school in aspects across all years.

CNCA

Staff are cared for so they can care for you

CNCA is Kent's most respected independent nursing and care agency and the leading provider of training for professional care in the community.

Since 1993, CNCA has been providing qualified carers, support workers, residential social-workers, care assistants and companions to the NHS, Social Services, private hospitals and trusts, nursing homes, residential homes, day-care centres and housing associations across Kent.

A key contribution of the agency is its support of adults with learning difficulties, in homes and in the community, so that they can lead as independent lives as possible.

It has established a reputation for responding quickly, providing the highest standards in professional care and exceeding expectation in terms of client satisfaction.

In a changing business environment, CNCA maintains the highest traditional standards but offers innovative solutions to the modern care industry. It can provide trained, qualified staff at a moment's notice; and it develops flexible long-term programmes that provide clients with the right kind of carers exactly where and when needed.

CNCA has rigorous training induction procedures for its own staff and has established a Training and Assessment Centre to provide in-house NVQ supervision and assessment for all major care disciplines.

Every day it looks to see where it can improve, accepting and understanding its responsibilities. It will act without hesitation to do all that is required and more.

Sometimes people face 'extraordinary' problems in their lives, some expected, others unique situations that occur out of the blue.

What is meant by 'extraordinary' is a problem faced outside the realm of 'ordinary' lives.

For instance, a loved one might be enduring some form of physical disability, or a family member experiencing the after-effects of a serious operation; a child might be born with severe learning difficulties, or autism; or, indeed, a parent could have grown too old to safely fend for themselves.

Each situation poses its own problems and difficulties. Each comes wrapped in its own unique circumstances, not only for the family, but more importantly for the person who requires support and care to help them live as 'ordinary' a life as possible.

If you are facing an extraordinary situation, the question is: 'Where do I turn for help?'

The first port of call is usually, and appropriately, Social Services, who will try to help find a solution to your problem.

Unfortunately, many changes are taking place in the care sector and more emphasis is placed on the individual to arrange their own carers.

Herein lies the difficulty and possibly another dilemma for the family. CNCA has been helping people throughout Kent for more than 13 years, supporting families and their loved ones at home with qualified carers and support workers.

All staff undertake rigorous police and other statutory checks, a full induction process that examines both their qualifications and references and have regular training designed to keep them one step ahead of requirements.

Once a comprehensive needs assessment is carried out, the appropriate care is delivered and maintained.

CNCA operates a 24-hour service 365 days a year, manned by care coordinators who have detailed knowledge of each individual's needs.

Kim Stevens, chief executive officer of CNCA, said: "We are committed to providing the best care services and the best care training in the region."

Training, courses and careers

College shops to get students jobs

MIDKENT College is launching two specialised JobShops.

Located at the Medway and Maidstone campuses, the JobShops will advertise vacancies and match employers with suitable candidates.

They will also offer tailored support to help students with application forms, interview techniques, CV writing, and more.

Henry Nydam – chairman of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce – officially opened the Medway Campus JobShop at a ceremony last week.

He said: "With youth unemployment at record levels it has become incumbent on all educational and business organisations to do all we can to address the situation.

"We need to give young people some hope that they will be able to advance their careers, and something like the JobShop will be a fantastic help.

"It's a one-stop shop for information, advice and guidance, and I urge all local employers looking for skilled staff to make full use of it."

Government figures released earlier this week show that there are now more than a million young people without a job in the UK.

This means the unemployment rate in the 16-24-year-old age bracket now stands at 22.3 per cent.

Daniel's creating a 'Buzz' at firm

A student on work placement at Buzzlines Travel Ltd in Hythe has won accolades at the National Placement and Internship Awards 2012.

Daniel McAllister, a student from the University of Sheffield was the winner of the Best Student Contribution to a Small or Medium-sized Enterprise Award, which recognises the student who had exceeded expectations and genuinely made a significant impact to the business as a whole.

During the first six months of his placement, he had created a whole new brand under the name The Buzz Student Travel which has since been gaining acclaim as a provider of student weekend tours.

Daniel is currently completing a 12-month placement with Buzzlines Travel Ltd, which specialises in coach holidays, day trips and private and corporate coach hire.

Daniel said he "couldn't have done it without the support of everyone at the company".

Managing director Nigel Busbridge said he was pleased to be able to offer students the opportunity to have a real impact and a proper job within a business and allow their ability to shine.

Work experience in football up for grabs

GILLINGHAM FC have joined forces with npower to launch What's Your Goal – a nationwide work experience scheme designed to inspire young people in Medway to explore the vast and varied careers found in football.

Working in partnership with Gillingham and the Football League Trust, npower is seeking to support young people's employment opportunities for the future, by showcasing the wide range of job opportunities available within football and demonstrating that you don't have to be the star player on the field to make your mark in the industry.

What's Your Goal? 2012 will see electricity supplier npower work with Gillingham and the other 71 clubs in the Football League to offer more than 300 valuable work experience placements to school children in Years 10-11 in their local areas.

In addition to the placements, npower is also offering youngsters the chance to win a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to spend a day being mentored by the WYG 'Dream Team'. Children in Years 7-11 are invited to apply for the chance to gain first-hand experience of working life by spending time with experts such as Karren Brady and Robbie Savage and trying out their coveted jobs for themselves.

Having proved their worth after submitting a CV and video evidence demonstrating their enthusiasm, 11 young people will be chosen to take on roles such as being a pundit with Robbie Savage at the npower Championship Play Offs; helping Karren Brady make boardroom decisions at West Ham, and putting a team of professional players through their paces working as first team coach with Paul Trollope at Birmingham City FC.

Footballing people such as Reading FC owner Sir John Madejski, Cardiff City FC manager Malky Mackay, and Sasa Ibringova the Football League's most senior female referee, have also come on board to support the initiative.

Karren Brady said: "npower's What's Your Goal 2012 is a fantastic way to show young people that you don't need to score goals to shoot to the top in the football industry.

"Whether you're passionate about business, photography, presenting or refereeing the nation's favourite sport, this scheme offers young people a great way to learn skills from the best in the business."

Robbie Savage said: "I've worked in the football industry for over 20 years and I've loved every minute of it. A lot of people look at football and don't see how much effort goes into each and every match but we're here to show young people just how many opportunities there are – and not all of them mean you have to be able to kick a ball."

To enter, students are asked to fill out a job application, downloadable at www.npower.com/whatsyourgoal.

THE INTERVIEW

Katya Virshilas

AS another season of Strictly Come Dancing finishes on the BBC, you might think the professional dancers would be in need of a rest after carrying their bumbling celebrities through the competition.

But with a range of spin-off shows and UK tours, it seems that relaxing is not an option. Especially for Katya Virshilas, who is embarking on another excursion around our Strictly-obsessed nation.

Alongside fellow Strictly pro Pasha Kovalev, the sequinned siren is exchanging the small screen for theatre boards at Tunbridge Wells, Dartford and Chatham.

The 28-year-old said: "We will be telling a story of dance through the ages and combining a lot of different dances, like ballroom and Latin, as well as very different choreography. It will have something for the Strictly audience, something for the kids and something for the real dance enthusiasts, too."

Virshilas was born in Lithuania before moving with her family to Israel and finally Vancouver in Canada, when aged 13 her love of dance began.

She said: "I saw a dance competition on television and I asked my mum to take me to a dance class and it just went from there. I got into the whole world of it and got addicted."

The performer won numerous championships and was the youngest-ever British Columbian Latin dance champion at the age of just 16.

A keen actress on the side, she has made appearances in popular American TV shows such as Supernatural, Smallville and The Guard.

However, it was her appearance in a Hollywood

Dancing is no drug but it is Strictly addictive

Ahead of her visit to Kent with partner Pasha Kovalev, TV's queen of the moves tells Joe Bill how she waltzes celebrities to a new stardom movie that alerted the BBC to her.

She said: "I did a scene dancing with Antonio Banderas in a film called Take The Lead and one of the Strictly researchers saw it."

"They were looking for a Canadian champion. Strictly always looks for new talent and if you are in the dance world sooner or later you will cross paths. It was incredible working with Antonio at the time – it is good to learn things throughout your career and he was really great."

Three series on and Virshilas has become part of the furniture of the show, having been handed more than her fair share of tough tasks as she looks to mould the next celebrity into a competitive dancer. These have included a wise-cracking cricketer and a leg-shaving rugby-player.

"My favourite was probably Gavin Henson, but I loved working with Phil Tufnell," she said. "The reason was I was really proud of Gavin. He went so far in the competition [the semi-finals], but he was not a good dancer at the beginning at all."

In the last series, Virshilas was paired with television presenter Dan Lobb but was knocked out in just week three of the competition.

She said: "Everyone who comes in and does the show wants to do their best. Some get it easier than others. So it depends on the person to see how long it takes them to pick it all up."

But Virshilas would not be drawn into revealing who was her favourite judge on the show and who she disliked:

"I love all the judges – each one of them brings something different to the show, so I can't say my favourite. Every celebrity that comes to Strictly brings something different, which is why it is so great and unique."

For the upcoming tour, Virshilas will perform live with Strictly co-star Pasha Kovalev for an evening of exhibition dance routines, featuring the rumba, waltz, foxtrot, tango and jive. There will also be a section for the audience to put their questions to the pair to find out what really goes on behind the scenes of the hit show.

Five members of the audience will even get the chance to join the cast on stage in their very own Strictly dance competition.

And with the Strictly tour just about to head around the UK, too, Virshilas is starting to get used to England becoming her new home.

She said: "My home is in British Columbia, Canada, and I try to get there between tours, but most of the time I now stay in England. I love this country and I love the fact that I get a chance to be part of the most incredible show here."

This has also meant her acting career has taken a back seat, but Virshilas would not have it any other way.

"I am just enjoying Strictly and dancing in general right now, so I am not doing much acting, but you never know."

■ The Katya Virshilas And Pasha Kovalev Tour 2012 reaches the Assembly Hall Theatre, Tunbridge Wells, on Tuesday, March 27 (phone 01892 530613 to book). On Sunday, April 1, the dancers will be at The Central Theatre, Chatham (phone 01634 338338), and on Saturday, April 14, at The Orchard Theatre, Dartford (01322 220000).

Feel good with Mama’s Kentish foods in spring

THIS year, Mama Feelgoods has reached the top three in the Best Kent Local Retailer Of The Year awards, with the final standings announced in March.

Both the deli shop and café at Mama Feelgoods support local producers, allowing their range to be unique and different from the big supermarkets. Because they source directly from the farm or producer, it allows them to be competitive with their pricing.

The shop is renowned for their own range of delicious cakes and biscuits, with the most popular, a moist carrot cake, made with local carrots, free-range eggs and Kentish rapeseed oil.

Their new handmade-biscuit range includes almond macaroons and heart-shaped shortbread biscuits. The latter are perfect for Valentine's Day.

Other local products sold at this fine food store include Cheese Makers Of Canterbury's wonderful cheeses, Biddenden and Chapel Down wines, beers and ciders, Kent Crisps, Quex oils and Farmer Palmer and Monkshill Farm free-range meat and eggs.

Open seven days a week, with free parking.

Customers agree on Elvey success

ELVEY Farm-owner Jeff Moody and his team are putting the finishing touches to a sumptuous five-course Valentine's night supper for 2012.

Dishes will include a dozen fresh oysters, Chateaubriand to share and a dark-chocolate-and-Cointreau mousse.

Elvey Farm is the perfect spot for a romantic Valentine's Day meal: the log fire will be going strong, the candles will be lit and the front-of-house staff will be nice and discreet.

Just this month, Elvey Farm was short-listed for Kent Restaurant Of The Year as part of the Produced in Kent Awards, having beaten off stiff competition from 90 other restaurants to reach the final three.

Jeff said: "We're all so excited about this award. It means a lot to us because it's voted for by our customers – so we must be doing something right. It's a fantastic recognition for our staff... and our suppliers, too."

The next stage in the competition is a visit from a mystery diner.

"We're bound to spill soup in their lap," said Jeff.

Elvey Farm in Pluckley is a beautiful location, set in the heart of Darling Buds Of May country. It's the perfect spot for a restaurant, tucked away across the rolling fields of Kent with amazing views in all directions.

Locally-sourced food is always a priority for the team at Elvey Farm and ensures a fresh taste to all of the meals.

It is every bit the little country oasis and which remains open for dinner seven nights a week from 6.30pm and for lunch every Sunday from midday.

Let food be the music of love... so just dine on

IN these days of tightening our belts and watching the pennies, you can maybe sympathise with couples who don't celebrate Valentine's Day.

They might indeed be applauded for the attitude that the red hearts, overpriced flowers and fluffy teddy bears are just part of one big marketing ploy.

Then why not take a stand against Corporation Cupid by eating out at one of Kent's truly individual restaurants?

The range of choice in the county will have even the Valentines-haters considering a romantic meal by the sea, in our beautiful countryside, or at one of our traditional village or town pubs.

With winter not looking to shift into spring any time soon, what could be better than a cosy meal for two with a bottle of wine by a roaring fire at one of the county's many eateries?

Shrewd customers will use the Valentines set-menu offers to their advantage and get Brownie points with a loved one as a bonus.

Diners can even use the Valentine's Day opportunities to try something new, perhaps a spicy oriental dish, or maybe sample some of the fruits of the sea available at every turn in this, the Garden of England.

And for those of you who are on the romantic side and who may well invest in some chocolates, a cuddly toy and a suggestive card, nothing says 'I Love You' better than a meal with your other half.

This is one night of the year when you can avoid being coy, show your Shakespearean talents with a poem and place all your focus and attention on one person... and that cracking deal on the champers as souls join over a lovely meal.

Saturday, February 4, at 8pm

ONE half of the writing force behind timeless 80s pop-rockers Squeeze, Chris Difford heads back to Whitstable due to popular demand. The double Ivor Novellowinning singer-songwriter has penned tunes to live your life by for almost 30 years. With his Squeeze co-founder Glenn Tilbrook, Difford gave us such classics as Up The Junction, Cool For Cats and (the very apt for Whitstable) Pulling Mussels From A Shell. ## Celtic rockers Karnataka on wave of form

Astor theatre, Deal

Friday, February 3
01304 370220
www.theastor.org

CELTIC rockers Karnataka head to Astor Community Theatre early next month after the release of their new album, The Gathering Light. The new record, which was voted Best International Album at the World Web Awards in Italy, is the fifth from the group, who have been richly acclaimed by BBC Radio 2's Bob Harris. Karnataka have already performed all over the world alongside artists such as Led Zeppelin's Robert Plant, but the group are still looking to make as big an impact on the UK as The Pogues did almost 30 years ago. Last year Karnataka took another big leap forward with the announcement that Hayley Griffiths, lead vocalist with Riverdance and Michael Flatley's Lord Of The Dance, would be joining the band.

Positive developments in the housing market

SUPPLY and demand held up in December, bringing greater optimism for future house sales, according to the latest UK Housing Market Survey.

More stock continued to come on to the market for the third consecutive month, the Royal Institute Of Chartered Surveyors report said.

Six per cent more respondents reported rises rather than falls in new homes coming on to the market, suggesting that vendors remain confident of selling.

This confidence could stem from the fact that demand has been in positive territory in the past six months, with 11 per cent more respondents reporting new buyer enquiries increasing. However, respondents continue to report that a lack of mortgage finance is hindering many, with the cash-rich best-placed to take advantage of the market.

Consequently, sales expectations for the coming three months also remain in positive territory, with 19 per cent more chartered surveyors expecting transactions to rise.

Prices across the South East continued to dip in December, but at a slower rate, with 14 per cent more surveyors reporting price falls rather than rises (from -22 per cent).

Ian Perry, RICS housing spokesman, said: "The increasing number of prospective sellers is a positive development."

Is renting your home set to be the new owning?

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THIS year could be the one in which property renting becomes the new owning, according to one of the UK's largest letting experts, Belvoir.

Increasing consumer nervousness, rising levels of unemployment and a squeeze on people's purchasing power triggered by a global downturn and the Eurozone debt crisis are all factors that could make many turn their back on prospective home-ownership, the company predicts.

"I believe that, for reasons of flexibility, mobility and budget, 2012 will see a shift towards more people viewing renting as a preferred lifestyle choice, rather than a necessity," said Dorian Gonsalves, managing director of Belvoir, which operates more than 140 offices throughout the UK, including one in Sidcup.

"By renting, people are able to plan their spending much more accurately and also have the flexibility to relocate and follow job offers. These factors are gaining increasing importance," said Gonsalves, pictured.

The number of house-purchase transactions nationally is about half of those pre-credit-crunch, and with the very real prospect of continued reduced mortgage lending over the next year, demand is expected to remain low.

Experts predict that more and more housing stock will be turned over to the private residential lettings sector, which is still experiencing solid rental yields, propped up by modestly increased levels of buy-to-let funding made available to professional landlords.

"We predict that rents will rise moderately, remaining more or less in line with inflation throughout the year," said Angie Mourgue, of Belvoir's Sidcup branch. "While there will be considerable regional variations, my view is that increased rents and stable or decreasing house prices will result in increased rental yields in 2012."

Belvoir has noticed some new trends emerging from its portfolio of landlord and tenant clients.

'Double renting' is a new phenomenon – in which homeowners are now letting out their existing home to provide extra income and moving to another lower-cost rental property.

There is also growing evidence that larger builders have started to develop once-dormant land sites, with a view to letting the properties rather than attempting to sell them.

In addition, a trend towards longer-lease rental agreements means a rented home is, for many, no longer just a short-term place to live.

Following the European model, many UK tenants are now looking to make a rented property their long-term home.

Dealer care switched on to Vauxhall's unique and new hybrid

Driving carsforkent.co.uk

By Sam Davison

editorial@archant.co.uk

IT IS perhaps the most aspirational car in Britain across both new and second-hand car markets – it is the BMW 3-Series.

Private and company car user choosers clamour for one, as shown by the model's perennial top 10 slot in the UK's best-selling car chart, and used car buyers pay top dollar to get one, despite such obvious ubiquity.

The model's history stretches back to 1975, but it was the 1982 E30 model that British buyers really took to their hearts; a favourite of the Yuppie generation it spawned desirable convertible and Touring (estate) models too.

A new 3-Series chapter opens on February 11, when the sixth generation car arrives in UK showrooms, bringing yet more cutting-edge tech to a model that remains relatively affordable yet upmarket.

Generation six will further improve on Efficient Dynamics green credentials that, unlike some, BMW prefers to adopt across an entire model line-up. Despite being slightly longer, the new car is lighter and all models will have stop/start systems to save fuel and emissions in city driving or traffic jams. We can also expect a hybrid version later this year.

Significantly though, the car also marks a return to style after the slightly awkward looks of its predecessor; the German premium marque blundered up a styling blind alley for a decade according to some BMW fans.

But the new 3-Series looks more the part. Key to this has been the wider treatment of BMW's trademark grille, which used to be called the twin kidney grille, but has evolved from that now.

As a result, the front looks wider, lower and meaner even though this car is slightly narrower than its predecessor.

The sharper front then cues a flowing look that makes full use of an additional nine centimetres of length, more than half having gone into extending the wheelbase, boosting rear seat space – something the old car was criticised for.

But if a lot of 3-Series modern day appeal and demand comes from its image and that famous propeller badge on the bonnet, we must remember that this derived from its status as a driver's car.

So the longer wheelbase should deliver enhanced handling, though BMW insists this will not be at the expense of ride comfort.

All of the new range gets a new Driving Experience Control switch offering Comfort, Sport, Sport + and Eco Pro options for the powertrain and chassis.

Six-speed manual gearboxes are standard, but a new eight-speed automatic gearbox is offered on all engines too, and customers might like a new approach to trim levels, with ES and SE continuing as the cheaper ones and Sport, Modern and Luxury appearing as more upmarket choices, with M Sport remaining as the price and performance flagship.

BMW star given new injection of style for sixth incarnation

LEADING LIGHT: BMW's new 3-Series now has a longer wheelbase, boosting rear-seat space, and it should also enhance handling but not at the expense of ride comfort

DON'T LIKE...

...to complain actually. This marks a return to 3-Series visual style and impact, while pushing the green envelope still further

NOT SURE...

...it will get an easy ride though from its vastly improved Audi A4, Mercedes-Benz C-Class and Volvo S60 compact executive class rivals

REALLY LIKE...

...the flattened BMW grille, which allows a much more dynamic front end and sets the tone for a smart overall shape

Big Volvo is unsung eco hero

By Sam Davison
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IF you had told me ten years ago that I would now be driving Volvo's executive flagship sipping 60mpg, I would have said you had been doing the opposite – drinking too much.

Let's face it, you just would not expect a big car to be an eco hero, and yet the big Swede is just that, with an official combined fuel consumption figure of 62.8mpg.

Of course, these figures can be misleading so I put this mile-eating starship on course for a weekend break from Ashford to Bruges and, without really trying, reckon I was not far short of that figure.

Further evidence of this miserliness was the fuel gauge reading that I'd used just a quarter of a tank to cover 220 miles.

The exact car was a £27,395 S80 DRIVE SE – entry point to the series of ultra eco versions of Volvo's biggest conventional model.

But the DRIVE label has been applied to all the greenest cars across the Volvo range and quietly become one of the most successful eco brandings on the market, much respected by tax aware company car user choosers.

By tweaking the aerodynamics, powertrains and tyres, Volvo has managed to make DRIVE cars incredibly economical without seeming to greatly affect the driving experience.

Admittedly, dropping a modest 113bhp 1.6-litre diesel engine into a car the size of the S80 – as in the case of the test car – will not deliver sparkling performance.

On the other hand, the car never felt particularly short of puff in cut and thrust town traffic and you can forgive it lots when it delivers such good economy and CO2 emissions, the latter being so low that it escapes road tax in year one and incurs just £30 a year thereafter – impressive for a genuine five-seater that cossets like a limo.

GREEN SURPRISE: Despite being a big Volvo, the S80 DRIVE SE was amazingly restrained with fuel, sipping just one quarter of the tank to cover more than 200 miles

Indeed, that's the key point with the S80 DRIVE: how many other big cars can transport you close to a thousand miles on a tank, while you lounge in typically comfortable Volvo seats in a well-appointed cabin?

Dearer German rivals from Audi, BMW and Mercedes-Benz will get a mention here, of course, and they are dynamically superior if it is your wont to chuck a big car like this around, but the S80 DRIVE is pretty much unbeatable for economy and its ability to simply eat up the miles in comfort when driving long distances for business or holiday.

The recurring comment during our Bruges weekend was about how relaxing it was to be in, with good quality fixtures and fittings and a logical well-worked dashboard with aux/iPod connector in the well-padded armrest.

Rear passengers get their own audio controls and heating/air con vents.

The boot is simply enormous and comes with its extras too: a 12v socket and a handy flip up bulkhead to keep shopping bags corralled.

This is the second generation S80 and though it arrived in 2006 and it's two years since it had a facelift, the slippery shape and trademark scalloped rear wings have kept it looking fresh.

Volvo also used the 2009 facelift to radically upgrade the car's previously stodgy handling without spoiling the ride, to give it a much flatter and tauter stance on corners.

Volvo's latter-day performance is all the more impressive for being set in motion during straitened times while the marque had a 'For Sale' sign hanging over it during Ford ownership. It has since been sold to one of China's powerful and wealthy car groups, Geely – pronounced with a 'j' – which will surely be more generous in bankrolling Volvo's quest to be greenest.

First GEAR MOTORING NEWS

Renault eases back in Britain

AIMING to improve profitability in the UK, Renault is axing five models from its line-up here.

These are the Laguna family car, Wind Roadster and three MPVs: the windowed version of the Kangoo van, plus the Modus and Espace.

However, the French marque will launch three electric cars: the Zoe, Fluence and two-seat Twizy (pictured).

Dacia due for 2012 launch

RENAULT'S UK cuts must also be viewed in the light of launching its budget Romanian subsidiary Dacia here in 2012.

The attractive Duster 4x4 SUV will be first, but expect the Sandero family hatch sometime too.

Dacia was long associated with Renault, but has made big strides since the French giant took direct control in 1999.

Custom appeal available for IQ

WE have said for some time that Toyota needs to give its clever little IQ city baby some customising options – and that's what it's now got.

Various smart leather seat themes can be specified for £775, plus a range of side decals (£200) and roof decals (£180) – why should Fiat 500 and BMW Mini owners have all the fun?

MOTORING

More dealer care is sparked by Ampera

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

VAUXHALL aims to make ownership of its unique new Ampera hybrid even more distinctive for drivers.

For starters, buyers will get a petrol-electric car like no other, as the Ampera runs on electric power all the time, with the tiny onboard petrol engine used simply to recharge the batteries and extend the car's range – thereby avoiding the 'range anxiety' that dogs electric-only cars.

But they will also, says Vauxhall, receive a level of personalised customer service above and beyond what its dealers currently offer on mainstream models – a core of 23 Vauxhall dealers will be Ampera specialists.

The car is also backed by Vauxhall's Lifetime Warranty and an eight-year/100,000 mile battery warranty.

Ampera owners will, of course, be paying for this extra attention since the car is not cheap – it starts at £29,995 even after including the Government's £5,000 grant for cars that plug into the mains.

On the other hand, running an Ampera should be cheap too. Apart from the piffling cost of re-charging the batteries overnight, the car's first 25-50 miles will be free, but use as a conventional car over longer distances is expected to deliver an average fuel consumption around 235mpg. With CO2 emissions of just 27g/km it does also fall well below the 100g/km threshold at which a car incurs road tax.

Vauxhall has recognised too that a premium price means premium expectations from buyers, so the standard spec is generous, including DAB radio, cruise control, alloys, and a seven-inch touch-sensitive screen for audio, sat nav and so-on.

And finally, the Ampera does cut a bit of a dash, so early adopters will like the fact that their extra expense and green statement is rewarded with a car that makes an impact with their peers.

The first Amperas will be on the road from May 1 and order books have just opened.

Civic eases up on starship style

HONDA really went for it with the design of the previous Civic. That car – the eighth generation – still turns heads now, let alone when it replaced its bland predecessor in 2006.

However, it was possibly a bit too radical for many loyal Honda customers, who buy the Japanese marque for reliability, the 'made in the UK' stamp on its best-known models and, dare we say it, conservatism.

So it comes as no surprise that the generation nine Civic, out now, sees some throttling back on the styling front to create a car that should please everyone.

But there is a caveat since not everyone liked the compromised visibility of the split rear screen (see picture), yet Honda has opted to carry over this hallmark, while the controversial space age interior is not completely banished either though quality has risen yet another notch.

Safety has also been upped, with better passenger protection as well as tweaks to minimise injury to pedestrians and cyclists.

Prices for this descendant of the original 1972 Civic start at £16,495 and the engine options at launch are 1.4 or 1.8 petrol, or 2.2 diesel.

All manual versions get a fuel-saving stop/go system, with stats available via the dashboard info screen as well as climate and audio settings plus sat nav if fitted.

The flagship for now is the £26,595 diesel 2.2 i-DTEC EX GT, but the jury's out on whether Honda will add a Type-R performance star; industry insiders say the eco-conscious marque may drop such an overt hot hatch and fill the gap with a headline grabbing performance version of the CR-Z hybrid coupé.

Standard kit on entry level Civic SE models includes that dashboard screen as well as 16-inch alloys, automatic air-con and USB/MP3 connectivity.

What are winter tyres?	Why should I fit winter tyres?	Will they fit my vehicle?
Winter tyres are specially designed to grip in the ice and snow. They're perfect for the depths of a British winter, European skiing trips, or countries where it's law to use them. Narrower than normal road tyres, winter tyres can be fitted on to a new or used set of steel or alloy wheels. You fit the winter wheels and tyres to your vehicle in the winter and change back to your normal wheels in the summer.	You don't have to use winter tyres by law in the UK, but you do in certain European countries. For icy and snowy conditions winter tyres are far safer - they give far more grip than the wider rubber your vehicle comes with. Winter tyres will keep you moving when your normal tyres will be skidding and sliding. Kerbing your wheels will be a thing of the past.	Yes. We stock winter tyre and wheel sets for all makes of Family Hatch - Saloon - Sports Car - MPV 4x4 & Commercial. We are highly knowledgeable on recommended downsizing to any vehicle. # Commercial Vehicles

editorial@archant.co.uk

THERE'S lots of talk of a double-dip recession for the UK economy, but you wouldn't think it to look at commercial vehicle sales in 2011.

Registrations for new vans and trucks bounced back to end almost a quarter up on 2010, breaking down into a 25 per cent boost for trucks and a 16.7 per cent hike for vans.

That's not just good news for the industry itself but may signal confidence at last in the economy, since vans and trucks oil the wheels of the country's business and industrial output.

After guarded optimism earlier in 2011, the motor industry's mouthpiece, the SMMT, was upbeat about the way the year signed off.

"Renewed business confidence fuelled the month-on-month rises, while innovative developments in vehicle design and technologies provided solid business reasons for companies to upgrade their vehicles in 2011," said SMMT

Commercial sector boost may signal better times for UK PLC

chief executive Paul Everitt.

Looking ahead to 2012 though, he said: "There can be no room for complacency this year – the Government must deliver its growth strategy and help strengthen business and consumer confidence."

Anecdotal evidence across the commercial vehicle trade suggests an upturn had to come soon anyway.

Operators large and small had pushed their vehicle-replacement programmes far beyond normal limits in the face of the economic downturn, only to find that ageing vehicles start to look tatty – with public image consequences – and incur more unprofitable downtime for maintenance.

As the SMMT said, operators are also upgrading for other reasons: van powertrain technology is beginning to echo that of the car sector, so there are real commercial and public relations benefits from running a leaner and meaner fleet with better fuel consumption and lower emissions.

For Kent firms operating into London, there is also an opportunity to save on the capital's congestion charge by buying eco vans with CO<sub>2</sub> emissions below 100g/km.

Smaller operators are also playing a part because they are being forced to buy new vehicles due to a scarcity of decent used stock, caused by the big boys hanging on to their fleets for longer and running up galactic mileages.

Indeed, auction giant BCA reckons the van market faces a 'black hole' in supply in the years ahead due to new van registrations tumbling when the recession hit in 2007.

The report assumes that national demand for used vans will be in the region of 300,000 annually as the economy improves, leaving a yawning shortfall of some 275,000 first-time used vans entering the market each year from 2011 to 2015.

Vans make shift up to car comfort league

By Sam Davison
editorial@archant.co.uk

VAN design has been revolutionised over the past decade or so.

Operators have seen economy, efficiency and flexibility soar, while drivers have enjoyed better performance, refinement and safety.

Much of the latter benefits have come about because of crossover designs from cars.

Initially, this was confined to smaller models derived from superminis or family hatchbacks, such as the Fiat Punto or Citroën C2 Enterprise vans; all that was needed was to blank out the rear windows and the driver could enjoy all the benefits of the equivalent car-owner, including air-con and a decent sound system

But the same philosophy has since travelled up the line to larger vans, which can sometimes be derived from the platforms of popular

ROOMY: This airy cab view of a Mercedes-Benz Vito panel van underlines how comfort levels for van-drivers have grown steadily in recent years hatchbacks, too, even if the van body is bespoke.

Load capacities have also widened, varying from as little as three cubic metres for a car-derived hatchback used by a courier company or perhaps as a small company's runabout, right up to a 17 cubic-metre delivery van.

Access has improved, too. Many larger vans have low floors in the driving compartment for easy access and most vehicles above the super-mini class now come with at least one sliding door as standard to aid loading – many buyers also take up the option of a second 'slider'.

There is now a choice usually of side-opening twin doors or a high-lift tailgate as well, while cab doors generally have a reduced opening angle, with the double benefit of making it easy for a busy driver to grab the handle to close the door and also avoid it swinging wide and hitting something.

On the performance front, petrol-driven vans may still be available, but they have been all but been displaced by the better economy and range plus pulling power low down in the rev range of four- and five-cylinder diesels.

Diesel operating benefits are then compounded by extended service periods, lower maintenance costs and longer-lasting parts.

The engine's partner, the gearbox, has also undergone a change. A six-speed manual gearbox is normally the standard – a couple of cogs better than only a few years ago – but urban operators are turning increasingly to automatic, semi-automatic or clutchless transmissions. These can usually be driven with manual selection anyway but are ideal for the stop-start traffic conditions of the town and city and can be as economical as a manual.

Van safety has also gained from the car market; along with driver's airbag and the option of passenger, side and front curtain airbags, there are active safety features including anti-lock braking (ABS), traction control (TCS), braking control (EBC) and electronic stability programme (ESP).

Berlingo drives off with another industry award

CITROËN'S award-winning Berlingo has scooped another accolade – this time it's the prestigious Institute of Transport Management's (ITM's) Best LCV 2012 award.

The judges' main criteria were reliability, cost-effectiveness and durability and they said of the French star: "Businesses are looking for LCVs that are lighter, with lower emissions and better fuel efficiency – qualities that the Citroën Berlingo range has in spades.

"In particular, the Citroën Berlingo e-HDI Airdream models are equipped with e-HDI micro-hybrid Stop & Start technology.

"For further fuel savings, all Berlingo vans are specified with Citroën's unique Trafficmaster telematics package. This further reduces urban fuel consumption by offering the fastest congestion avoidance routeing direct to the driver.

"The Berlingo has all the equipment and space of a light commercial van and yet drives like a car. It puts the customer in the driving seat."

Citroën itself claims that no other small LCV range in the UK can match the Berlingo's choice of models, payloads, load volumes, trim levels and seating configuration. It also offers a choice of petrol, diesel or dual fuel (petrol/LPG) engines, an extra traction van mimicking 4x4, a wide range of 'Ready to Run' specialist bodies and a platform cab.

LITTLE GEM: The Citroën Berlingo continues to win sector awards for performance inside and out

NEW KID IN TOWN: Pick-ups such as the Isuzu Rodeo, left, and Fiat's Doblo Work Up, right, have changed the perceptions of many buyers

Pick-Up Truck Man rides in

By Sam Davison

editorial@archant.co.uk

IS THERE a roadgoing breed called Pick-Up Truck Man to rival White Van Man?

UK registrations for pick-ups have soared in recent years, both as commercial and leisure vehicles.

A reason for private numbers rising is tax anomalies, but many commercial operators recognise that pick-ups are relatively cheap yet capacious workhorses available with two- or four-door cabs and, in the case of the 4x4 models, able to go most places required on a farm or construction site.

Could it be also that traditional off-roaders lack the carrying capacity and have become too gentrified?

Or do the interlopers cater for an inner desire to wear a check shirt, jeans and cowboy boots?

There is certainly an air of Americana about contenders, like the conveniently-named Isuzu Rodeo, though Fiat appears to think post-recession real-world economics should be applied, having launched a more compact offering based on the award-winning Doblo Cargo van.

The Doblo Work Up is a 'dropside' vehicle with compact external dimensions attractive across the agriculture, construction, maintenance or city parks services sectors, too.

Hyundai's iLoad eyes established van stars

HYUNDAI has now turned its attention to the commercial vehicle market, aiming to bring its car division's familiar virtues of value and durability into play.

But it is a five-year/100,000-mile warranty that many operators will be eyeing up – particularly owner/drivers – as the Korean giant seeks to make similar inroads to those it has made on major players in the car market.

The Hyundai iLoad panel van targets established stars like the Ford Transit and Vauxhall Vivaro. It comes with a traditional rear-wheel-drive chassis and offers low running costs and one of the best payloads and cargo areas in its class, having been developed specifically for the European market.

The iLoad's overall payload is 1062kg, while a load length of 2,375mm, width of 1,620mm and height of 1,350mm allow enough space to comfortably accommodate two standard pallets.

The overall load volume is 4.3 cubic metres with double rear and twin side-loading doors and a full-size steel bulkhead as standard.

Standard luxury equipment includes air-con and electric windows, while a six-seater double cab is also available.

ON THE MOVE: With its five-year/100,000-mile warranty, Hyundai's iLoad panel van could be about to make a big impact on the market

Smaller operators favouring Vauxhall

VAUXHALL sold more vans to the retail rather than fleet sector in 2011 than any other manufacturer, according to industry figures.

It supplied an impressive 11,436 vans to small businesses last year, with sales up a staggering 28 per cent, against a market up 8.32 per cent.

It is the first time in the company's history that it has finished top at retail on commercial vehicles over a calendar year; a year-end retail CV market share of 16.35 per cent was also an all-time record.

The Luton-built Vivaro was the best-selling van in the retail medium van segment, with sales up 58 per cent year on year.

Underpinning such success was a Vauxhall sales package of four years' zero per cent finance, four years' free servicing, a four-year warranty and four years' AA cover.

"Last year proved to be an excellent year for Vauxhall van sales," said Richard Collier, Vauxhall's national commercial vehicles sales manager.

"It's fantastic news for Vauxhall that despite the uncertain economic outlook there's still strong demand for fuel-efficient, high-quality vans with low running costs and excellent manufacturer support."

Vauxhall is the UK's largest manufacturer of commercial vehicles, with its Luton plant recently celebrating a decade of Vivaro production.

Earlier this year the plant won the contract to build the next generation of Vivaro, securing local jobs for the next decade.

Luton's plant director Mark Stein said: "Responsibility for the majority of the UK's industry volume in van manufacturing is a huge achievement and I heartily congratulate our excellent workforce for their commitment and dedication."

"Building on Vauxhall's more than 100-year history, we are now looking forward to an exciting future, with the next-generation Vivaro going into production in less than two years."

The latest addition to the multi-award-winning Vauxhall Commercial Vehicles range is the all-new Combo middleweight van, due in February.

Vauxhall generates the bulk of its CV production at Luton, but Merseyside's Ellesmere Port also builds the Astravan.

DEALS ON WHEELS:

The appeal of durable Mercedes-Benz vans like the Sprinter has been enhanced by ready M-B finance

Finance arm drives Mercedes on

MERCEDES-BENZ has doubled the amount of vehicles financed since 2009, helping more customers to purchase vans and trucks than ever before.

In 2011, one in every three Mercedes-Benz commercial vehicles and one in every two Mercedes-Benz tractors was financed by Mercedes-Benz Financial Services (MBFS).

The record levels in finance have been enhanced by the one-stop-shop approach of MBFS, which claims it has supplied credit to four out of every five customers applying for funding.

This dedicated financial arm says it has been able to offer highly competitive rates despite tough economic conditions in the UK, thanks to its independence from traditional high-street lenders.

MBFS, also known as CharterWay, is the only finance company to offer support from dedicated client service managers, free of charge, for any customers with five or more vans or trucks on contract hire, providing a complete relationship management service.

The managers are experienced commercial vehicle industry professionals, with the technical knowledge and appreciation of the challenges facing operators.

Alex Matthews, director of commercial vehicles and direct sales at Mercedes-Benz Financial Services, said: "We are still here providing finance for our customers when others aren't, and as a result our customer base is growing and we are proud to be supporting UK businesses during difficult financial climates."

"We have a really exciting year ahead in 2012, with the launch of the New Actros [truck], Canter TF [light truck], and developing some highly-compelling pricing options across Mercedes-Benz vans to make our products highly appealing and affordable to every customer."

Van-users told that pressure costs

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

MORE van and light goods vehicle (LGV) operators may be unwittingly slashing profitability and safety by overloading their vehicles.

The warning comes from leading UK tyre safety organisation TyreSafe and is based on evidence from the Government's licensing, testing and enforcement office VOSA (Vehicle and Operator Services Agency).

TyreSafe has said that unless operators compensate for carrying heavy loads by increasing tyre pressures to recommended levels, their tyres will wear out quicker, fuel consumption will increase and safety may be compromised.

"Overloading in itself is a serious safety hazard which operators must address, but even if they are carrying legal loads, they should ensure their tyres are adjusted and inflated to the correct pressure," said TyreSafe chairman Stuart Jackson.

"If tyres do not contain enough air for the load being carried, they are much more likely to experience a rapid deflation, which can result in a terrifying accident. There are also other significant downsides such as longer stopping distances, reduced stability, increased tyre wear and higher fuel consumption."

The effects of overloading and under-inflation are very similar. In these states, excessive heat builds up inside the tyre which significantly increases the likelihood of a dangerous blowout, particularly on high-speed motorway journeys.

When under-inflated, the tyre's contact patch with the road surface is reduced to two smaller

PUMP IT UP:

Failing to keep tyres properly inflated can apply serious pressure to operating costs, even on economical vans like the big Citroën Relay (above) and Fiat's Scudo (right) areas towards the outer edges of the tread. With the full vehicle load placed on these two areas, the tread wears at a much higher rate, forcing replacement much earlier than would be otherwise needed.

By running tyres at just 80 per cent of recommended pressure, operators can expect tyre life to be reduced to about 75 per cent. If the pressure falls to 60 per cent, they can expect to achieve just 35 per cent of the tyre's potential mileage.

When van tyres are inflated to the correct pressure for the load carried, they help the vehicle to travel further on each tank of fuel and reduce the amount of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions produced.

Calculations from one TyreSafe member show that when tyres are under-inflated by just 20 per cent, 3 per cent more fuel is used.

The correct pressures for both the laden and unladen state of the vehicle can be found in the manufacturers' handbook, inside the fuel filler cap, or on a plate located on the front door sills.

TYRESAFE'S TYRE PRESSURE TIPS...

- Use a reliable and accurate pressure gauge to check the pressure of van tyres at least once a month or before a long trip.
- Check the pressure in all tyres, not forgetting to check any spares as well.
- Tyre pressure should be checked against the vehicle manufacturer's recommended operating pressures for the load being carried.
- Check the pressure when tyres are cold or when the vehicle has travelled less than two miles.
- When checking pressures, give the rest of the tyre a thorough visual inspection. Remove any stones and other objects embedded in the tread. Look out for cuts, lumps or bulges.
- If you are unsure on any aspect of tyre pressure or tyre condition, take your vehicle to an approved fitting centre and speak to the experts.

Kent's Olympic Countdown

Breakthrough season sparks outbreak of Olympic ambition

In the first of a series with Kent's London 2012 hopefuls, chief sports reporter David Pritchard looks ahead with Tom Bosworth

FOR every athlete there comes a critical moment in their career when a psychological barrier is broken down with a performance which takes them to a new level.

The quantum leap arrived for Tom Bosworth at Birmingham's Alexander Stadium last July. Clocking 19 minutes 29 seconds for the five kilometre walk at the national championships, it smashed his personal best and set a new British record.

It came in a purple patch which took even the Sevenoaks race walker himself by surprise and provided a reservoir of confidence which remains invaluable in the task of qualifying for the Olympics this summer.

"Every time I race I think of that moment, those last few laps it felt like I was walking on water - an amazing feeling," he said.

"It really showed I'm at a high level now and why can't I go and get a qualifying time [for the Olympics]? I ask myself where it came from every day, but the training had gone well. I'd had a few injuries in the spring but since about May I'd trained hard and went for a 20 kilometre PB. I got that and then did the 5k.

"Obviously I'd been waiting for the right race and it just came that day. The following week I then broke my PB for 10k, so it was a good few days."

The 22-year-old finished 2011 ranked first in the country over 5k and 10k and second over the Olympic distance of 20k, catapulting him into contention for the London Games.

It has been a rapid rise for Bosworth, who until relatively recently thought dreams of competing at an Olympics would go unfulfilled.

He said: "Athens in 2004 was the first one I really remember watching - Paula Radcliffe, Kelly Holmes, people like that. The walks as well, I had been doing race walking a couple of years and never thought 'that's going to be me'."

"By Beijing in 2008 I was a good junior but still then you're only doing 10k and as a senior you do 20k - it's still a huge step. It's another world to compete at a senior major championships. The Commonwealth Games taught me that and I'm just going to learn and see where it goes."

The experience of competing at the 2010 Commonwealth Games in Delhi, finishing 11th, should provide a useful foundation if Bosworth lines up on The Mall in August, but the priority is on achieving the qualifying standard as soon as possible. He needs to trim just over two minutes off his best time to have any chance of making the team, but after a strong training camp in Spain this month confidence is high for the opening race of the season in Switzerland in March.

He said: "If any athlete wasn't thinking positively like that and putting themselves in those positions then they can't be that determined to get what they want or achieve what they should be able to achieve."

Paralympic ping pong pair picked for British squad

TWO Kent table tennis players will compete at the Paralympics this summer after being selected for Great Britain's team.

Ross Wilson, from Sheppey, and Tunbridge Wells' Will Bayley were included in the 10-strong line-up announced by ParalympicsGB on Wednesday.

It will be the second Games for Bayley, who competed at Beijing in 2008. The 24-year-old is ranked world number one after winning gold at the European Championships in Croatia last October.

The call-up is by far the most significant achievement yet for Wilson, aged just 16, who won a silver medal at the German Open last year.

He said: "I am really pleased to have been selected to ParalympicsGB and can't wait to compete in London. In international competition I'm one of the youngest players and the Paralympics definitely represent the biggest moment of my career so far."

"My family will be watching me and supporting me along the way and it will be really special to compete in front of a home crowd."

Wicketkeeper makes surprise return to international cricket

GERAINT Jones will make a comeback to the international scene in March after being called into the Papua New Guinea squad for Twenty20 World Cup qualifying.

The 35-year-old was born in the country in Oceania before moving to Australia.

Jones, who last played for England more than five years ago, now has a chance to represent his country of birth after being named in the Hebou Barramundi's provisional 18-man line-up.

They are attempting to reach the World Cup for the first time and will have to come through a tough qualifying tournament in Dubai to reach the final stages in Sri Lanka this September.

Only two countries out of 16 will make it, with Rarua Dikana's squad in a group with Afghanistan, Denmark, Nepal and Hong Kong alongside Canada, Netherlands and Bermuda, who have all appeared in previous World Cups.

The call-up means Jones will miss Kent's pre-season trip to Antigua, which was announced this week. The 10-day camp in the Caribbean will be followed by warm-up games at home against Middlesex and Glamorgan.

NATALIE Seymour is among the British women's hockey squad looking to gain some momentum ahead of the Olympics when the Champions Trophy begins this weekend.

The tournament in Argentina is the final world ranking event before the London Games and is contested by the eight best sides in the world.

Britain play Japan on Saturday, followed by group games against the Netherlands, ranked number one in the world, and China as they aim to claim a favourable draw in the quarter-finals.

Speaking from Rosario, Seymour, who plays for Canterbury ladies, felt it was a crucial stepping stone ahead

World Rally debut joy as Cook makes Monte Carlo podium

LOUISE Cook exceeded her own expectations with a successful debut in the World Rally Championship in Monte Carlo last weekend.

The 24-year-old's Ford Fiesta was up against much more powerful cars in her category, the Production Car World Rally Championship (PWRC), but she guided it home in second place.

The opening stages were made tougher by patches of ice and mechanical issues, but after making the cut the Maidstone driver's focus was on reaching the finish. Despite having to nurse the car home, Cook was delighted.

She said: "We achieved our goal though and I am so pleased as anything could have happened with the car, the gearbox has never done more than 400 miles on a rally and was now faced with 1200, so that was a constant worry."

"We did it though, we got her to the end and gained second place in the PWRC, a result that we could never have imagined, but we had to be there at the finish to take it."

Cook is now working hard on raising the £70,000 needed to compete for the rest of the season. The next round is in May, with the Acropolis Rally in Greece.

Spiller keen to finish his career with beloved Gills

By David Pritchard

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

ANKLE surgery has kept Danny Spiller on the sidelines for most of the season but as a return to the Gillingham first-team is within reach the midfielder has revealed a desire to stay at Priestfield for the rest of his career.

After a good start to the campaign a late tackle in the 1-0 defeat at Southend United in September brought Spiller's season to a grinding halt. The resulting operation means by the time he regains fitness in February five months will have been spent in rehabilitation.

It is hardly an ideal way to spend the final year of a contract, but if it is a concern, Spiller is not letting on. Instead the 30-year-old is not only aiming to earn a new deal this summer, but the intention is to stay until retirement.

"I don't worry because I've been at Gillingham a long time now and I know what they expect from me," he said. "I'll try to give them that when I'm fit and I look forward to getting back and earning myself another contract. It would be a milestone next year if I did stay at Gillingham because it would be my 10th year there as a professional. I'm hoping to remain as long as I possibly can because it's where I'm happy and it's where I feel I play my best football."

"I don't see any reason why I couldn't [finish my career there]. I'm a local lad and to achieve 10 years at a football club like Gillingham would be a feather in my cap."

the Gills than Spiller, who is a product of the club's youth system, signing professional forms in 2000. He went on to become a regular, only leaving in 2007 to join Millwall. It began an unhappy three seasons ravaged by injury, with spells at Wycombe and Dagenham & Redbridge before he returned to Gillingham in 2010.

The torrid spell at Millwall means Spiller has been able to keep some perspective during the latest injury setback.

He said: "You have to be mentally strong and realise you have to put the work in, more so possibly than normal day-to-day training."

"I've been out for a year and then 18 months at other stages in my career. When they said this would be 12-16 weeks I just got on with it."

Kent League clubs give thumbs-up to FA's pyramid scheme proposals

KENT League clubs were unanimous in their support for the FA's plans to restructure the non-league game, according to the league's chairman Denise Richmond.

Member clubs met to discuss the National League System Step 5-6 Review last week.

Under the proposals the number leagues at "step 5" in the pyramid which feed into the Ryman, Southern and Northern Premier Leagues, would be reduced from 14 leagues of varying sizes to 12 divisions of 22 teams each.

"I do know that Kent clubs are supporting the proposals, as they voted unanimously at the meeting," Richmond said.

"As for the future of the Kent League we don't know what it'll mean for the name and as a management committee we did have reservations, but we're democratically elected to represent our clubs and that's what we'll do."

It was feared the eight London clubs in the 16-team

ROAD TRIP: Deal Town (in white) face longer journeys

Kent League would be lumped in with a new London or Essex League, but under the new system they will be joined by six from elsewhere in the south-east, the most distant of which is Peacehaven & Telscombe from the Sussex County League.

Richmond said: "[The clubs] didn't want to be split up, with some clubs having to go north of the river and others staying south. There were also some reservations about finances but Kent League clubs have always complained that they wanted more games and this outcome means they do stay together."

Tunbridge Wells chairman Joe Croker gave the scheme his full support.

"We're very much of the view that we don't have enough games in a season," he said. "Should we not do well in the cups we'd only have 15 or 16 home games a season and that's enough to generate revenue or to keep up interest for our supporters."

However, Croker warned the plans were likely to meet opposition in Sussex.

He said: "We suspect it's going ahead anyway, but we know some of the Sussex teams, who would have the furthest to travel, are very much against it."

Sampson lends support to Bay

A LETTER containing words of encouragement from an FA Vase-winning manager formed part of Herne Bay's pre-match preparation ahead of their big cup win last weekend.

The Kent League side were handed a tough draw, away to Newcastle Benfield, in the FA Vase fourth round, but despite the long journey and tricky weather conditions they came through to win 2-1.

Before the game Bay boss Simon Halsey read a letter to the squad from Tommy Sampson, a former Winch's Field manager who guided Deal Town to the victory in the Vase in 2000.

Halsey said: "It was just really saying if we can travel that far and get a result there's a realistic chance we could go all the way. He said he'd be sitting at home with his radio on all afternoon clutching his winner's medal and telling us to believe in ourselves."

"It wasn't over the top but it was great to hear that from someone who has achieved what Tommy has. We got a lot of advice and good luck messages in the build-up and it all added up."

Rhys Lawson's winner two minutes from the end of normal time clinched the victory.

Monday's draw set up a tie at Winch's Field against Larkhall Athletic from Bath on February 11. The triumphant side will be just two rounds from the final.

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL FOCUS

WITH FRED ATKINS

Late Kick-Off misses the point

“ALL around Kent there are non-league clubs desperately trying to let people know they exist.

And in certain parts of the county, it seems reasonable to assume, a majority of the local population is unaware there is even a team bearing its town's name.

Last Saturday, Tunbridge Wells hosted an FA Vase fourth round tie, their biggest game in a number of years, and were pleased when 404 - less than one percent of the town's population - turned up.

Even a few seconds of television exposure could potentially have put hundreds on the gate, but non-league clubs are almost entirely ignored by TV companies obsessed with the professional game to the exclusion of everything else.

It wouldn't cost a lot to make a half hour show with 20 minutes of highlights from two games and the rest taken up with a preview of the weekend's fixtures.

Instead the BBC gives us a second series of Late Kick-Off, a show presumably designed for people who enjoy watching grown men laugh at each other's jokes and calling each other things like "Chappers".

LKO describes itself as "focusing on the fortunes of the 14 Football League clubs in London and the South East."

It's very obviously aimed at demonstrating a commitment to regional programming, with Dan Walker billed as the "key talent". The opening episode began with a desperate attempt to justify its existence, by treating these 14 clubs as if they were some kind of mythical league of allies.

Barry Davies was coaxed out of retirement to read an ode to the 14 to the strains of Faure's Pavane, presumably an attempt to give everything an air of class.

But the poem itself was a toxic brew of clichés where Gillingham got a three-second mention including the phrase "Garden of England", and lions apparently roared at Millwall, Eagles soared etc.

The reportage was even more hackneyed. David Gold, West Ham's publicity-starved co-owner said he'd clawed his way out of poverty for the 4,584th time.

There was even a story on the "fairy-tale" at AFC Wimbledon, as if anyone who hadn't spent the last 10 years in a monastery could possibly need to know anything more about a club that makes Katie Price look like Howard Hughes.

Episode two kicked off with eight people singing: "Oh, Orey, Orey! Orey, Orey, Orey, Orey, Orient." Was this because, as Eastenders repeatedly demonstrates, there is no limit to the public's appetite for semi-literate cockneys?

In the first two episodes, Kent received 73 seconds of footage in total: three for the poem, 20 on the Gills' defeat at Shrewsbury and a generous 40 on their seven-goal thriller with Wimbledon.

Studio chat meanwhile, made up around half the air time.

"We could go on all night," said Walker at one point. They undoubtedly will.
